Staff Consultants for Public Practice

51 Cannon St
London EC4
01-248 1781

NOW IS THE TIME TO THINK WHERE YOU ARE GOING!

Whilst you still have plenty of choice of career it is vital to know where to make the right move and when. Our consultants are able to give you expert advice which will help you in your decision; whether to stay in the profession; when to move into commerce; the question of salary; of location: these are questions we can answer.

QUALIFIED BY EXPERIENCE?

A medium-sized firm of Chartered Accountants with a substantial reputation requires two Seniors to report directly to Partners on matters concerning medium and large company audits. First-class experience, a thorough knowledge of all aspects of company audits and enough confidence to deal with clients will be more important than qualifications. Salaries are negotiable from £1,700-£2,500.

PROGRESSIVE CAREERS FOR YOUNG ACCOUNTANTS

A 16-partner firm offers recently qualified accountants and Part I or II Finalists excellent opportunities to widen their experience of modern accounting methods, including advanced techniques for auditing computer systems and to play a part in investigations and to transfer to specialist departments. Early promotion will be given to those who are capable of undertaking responsible work. Training schemes are provided and every encouragement will be given to those still studying. Salaries will be in the region of £1,700-£2,200.

AUDIT MANAGER

Because of rapid growth in recent years an exciting vacancy has arisen in the offices of a well-known, medium-sized firm based in the City for an audit manager. The successful candidate will be clear thinking, decisive, and able to lead an assignment team of up to 20 members. Salary will be in the range of £3,700-£4,000.

INTERNATIONAL PUBLIC PRACTICE

A period spent with an International firm can be invaluable to the Finalist or newly-qualified Chartered Accountant who feels the need to broaden his experience after articles or wants to travel abroad after an initial period in the U.K. Whatever your thoughts may be, we will be able to advise you and introduce you to these firms both in London, the Provinces, and abroad. Initial salary is from £1,700 for a Finalist up to £2,250 for a qualified man.

EXPERT ADVICE - SIMULTANEOUS INTERVIEWS - YOUR CAREER FURTHERED

YOUNG QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., provide newly qualified accountants with first class all-round experience in modern auditing techniques and accounting systems, and in taxation and investigation work, covering a wide range of businesses.

- We offer training courses covering all aspects of our work.
- For those whose talents fit them for a career in practice and whose aim is to reach the top of their profession, the prospects for an interesting and remunerative career are excellent.
- Should you wish to specialise in computer systems, taxation or consultancy, there are opportunities to do so after a period in general practice.
- If you are thinking of travel, you could work on assignments abroad or transfer to one of our overseas offices.

Conditions of service are competitive and will be discussed fully at an interview but, first, please write in confidence to A. J. Hardcastle, Staff Partner, at 11 Ironmonger Lane, London, E.C.2. giving brief details of your career so far.

Usual information please, in confidence to Box YQ 12659.

Let's call him...

Peter. He joined us last year having just qualified after four years articles with another firm. Since then he has been exposed to a wide variety of audit experience using modern techniques which he has assimilated by participating in advance training courses which have also instructed him in E.D.P. and systems analysis work amongst other things.

Peter has ability, determination and personality and he received initial promotion a few months after joining. He has the opportunity of transferring overseas and he can, of course, specialise if he wants to go more deeply into any particular activity of his choice. His development is planned and like any man of his ability his prospects of advancement to manager and partner status within a comparatively short period are excellent.

Peter has no regrets.

Advice for Directors

It is certainly rare for The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to join with an organization outside the accountancy profession in the preparation of a publication; contrary, however, to the foreword in a new statement out this week, it has happened before. Twenty-five years ago the Institute and The National Institute of Economic and Social Research appointed a joint exploratory committee whose report on Some Accounting Terms and Concepts was published in 1951, though without arousing anything like the interest it deserved.

The new statement is Financial and Accounting Responsibilities of Directors published by the General Educational Trust of the Institute (price 10s). The foreword is that of Sir Richard Powell, Director-General of the Institute of Directors, with which the English Institute collaborated. The statement is also being issued in a special edition by the Institute of Directors to its members in the United Kingdom.

To the casual observer it may not seem all that appropriate for a statement, which is concerned essentially with legal responsibilities of directors, to come as it does from the Council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants. The explanation lies partly in the remarkable extent to which the boards of companies include accountants, and partly in the need for auditors to be fully aware of the responsibilities of directors. The Council says: 'It is hoped that the statement will be useful to members acting as directors and to members generally in conveying to directors the extent of their responsibilities in respect of financial and accounting matters, prospectuses, take-overs and mergers. It is stressed, however, that the statement is not intended to cover other aspects, however important, of a director's position.'

In the space of a short booklet the Council has endeavoured to cover an enormous field and the result is inevitably a compromise. On some matters it sets out the requirements of the Companies Acts 1948 and 1967; on others it is no more than an index to the relevant sections of those Acts or to other regulations and requirements; while on others again, there is guidance as to the manner of discharging the responsibilities.

The Council says the statement 'sets out, where appropriate, what is considered to be best practice rather than what may be acceptable as the legal minimum required'. Emphasis is placed on the directors' fiduciary relationship to the company, and the Council quotes the Jenkins Committee recommendation that the basic principles underlying this relationship should be defined explicitly in company law as: 'a director of a company should observe the utmost good faith towards the company in any transaction with it or on its behalf and should act honestly in the exercise of his powers and the discharge of the duties of his office'.

A warning is given against placing overmuch reliance on the defence that a competent and reliable person was charged with the duty of seeing that there has been compliance with the provisions of the Acts governing the balance sheet and profit and loss account. 'Case law, as summarized in Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co (1925), requires that the directors act honestly and diligently and exercise reasonable skill and care, which applies as much to delegation as to anything else.'

The more important matters on which guidance is offered by the Council are the accounting records to be kept, and the information to be drawn therefrom; fixed assets in the balance sheet; stocks and work in progress; the information to be given in the directors' report; and prospectuses.

It is possible that many directors would welcome at some future date an expansion of the Council statement so that it may become a major reference book, requiring less recourse to the Acts and other sources – a companion volume, perhaps, to that well-established work prepared under the authority of the Institute of Directors, The Company Secretary: his functions, powers and duties. Meanwhile, the present statement (which has been approved by counsel) should be in the brief case of every director, auditor and company adviser, and on the desk of every company secretary.

How Much for an Accountant?

THE recent dispute over the remuneration of doctors and dentists within the National Health Service has inevitably focused public attention upon the extent to which professional rewards have kept pace, not only with inflation, but with the increasing responsibilities which are thrust upon professional men. Whilst collective bargaining lays so much stress upon maintaining proper 'differentials', is it possible to assess the worth in real terms of skilled professional services? What is the value of an accountant?

This is not a rhetorical question, nor is it intended to tempt a few disgruntled clients to supply a profane and uncomplimentary answer. It happens that some useful and interesting information has recently come to hand from several sources, indicating the level of remuneration which may be expected at different stages of a professional career.

The Manchester Society of Chartered Accountants last year circulated a questionnaire on articled clerks' conditions of service, which elicited replies from 184 firms in the society's area employing between them 745 articled clerks. It appears that 75 per cent of the firms replying were definitely in the 'small practitioner' class, the total strength of the office (partners and all staff included) being not more than 20 persons. Allowing for the possibility that a particular group may have been too small to be statistically significant, the overall picture presents few surprises: generally an O-level clerk in a small office fared noticeably worse than A-level or graduate entrants in a large one, where the average salary per annum was between £900 and £1,100.

These are averages over the whole area, and clerks in Manchester and other large towns were paid up to 50 per cent more than their contemporaries elsewhere. The total number of clerks comprised in the sample was distributed more or less evenly between large, medium and small practices.

The Association of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies, through its journal The Young Accountant, recently approached a random sample of some 50 firms in the London area for details of salary scales and benefits to A-level and graduate articled clerks and newly qualified staff. In this case the size of the sample must limit the general value of the survey, although its authors assert gaily enough that 'in the area of articled clerks' salaries in England and Wales, chaos reigns supreme'. Smaller firms are alleged 'to take slight advantage of their articled clerks', and only offer them realistic salaries after qualifying so as to compensate the 'magnetism' of the large firms. As an inspiration, the newly qualified man is assured that 'if your face fits, you really can command £5,000 plus at 30 without too much difficulty'.

The third in this trio is Reed Executive's Accountants Bi-annual Salary Survey which has the advantage of not being geographically limited in its scope. It is based on a sample of 500 qualified accountants in various classified jobs up and down the country, which unfortunately again restricts the significance of the conclusions to be drawn from it.

The table of median salaries by job and region confirms the general impression that salaries (as no doubt the cost of living generally) tend to be higher in south-east England than elsewhere, although there are some isolated anomalies doubtless referable to the small size of the sample. The fact that a finance director in the West Country is paid approximately £2,500 per annum more than his counterpart in the London area is more likely to be a statistical error than a representative state of affairs.

Amongst fringe benefits, the company car still holds pride of place, and all of those included in the sample apparently receive either the use of a company car or a car allowance. The almost pathological aversion of the Inland Revenue for 'directors' is doubtless largely to blame for the fact that company secretaries generally appear to fare better than their finance directors in such matters as non-contributory pensions, private medical treatment, insurance and free lunches. There is also a certain wry humour to be found in the fact that, of all the job titles listed, the 'long-range planner' appears to be the only one not qualified for an expense allowance.

Builders in Close Company

A NUMBER of small building companies were particularly affected by the introduction in 1965 of the 'close company' legislation. In a recent release, the National Federation of Building Trades Employers refers to the 'considerable hardship and damage' suffered by thousands of small and medium-sized companies, particularly by reason of the limitation on directors' remuneration and shortfall assessments. The former has meanwhile disappeared by virtue of the Finance Act 1969, which in the Federation's own words 'made a rather more civilized approach to this concept of taxation, and went at least some way towards removing the worst features of the earlier legislation'.

The Federation has now published Close Companies - a guide for Building Contractors to help its members to gain the maximum advantage from the new circumstances. The booklet is arranged in two parts, of which the first largely consists of practical suggestions and the second is intended as a source of reference to the appropriate legislative provisions. An appendix incorporates the corresponding section of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970.

Although addressed primarily to the building industry, the contents of this booklet are generally applicable to any close company. Copies are available from the NFBTE at 82 New Cavendish Street, London W1M 8AD, price 10s.

Mayoral Car Protest Fails

WESTMINSTER City Council had not acted unreasonably in purchasing a new Rolls-Royce for the use of its Lord Mayor, the District Auditor (Mr S. T. Evans) ruled last week. Mr Philip Goldenberg, a solicitor's clerk, had contended that the expenditure was 'unlawful' by reason of being excessive, and that it should be surcharged against those responsible for incurring it.

In evidence, the Deputy Town Clerk, Mr C. Jobson, submitted that the Lord Mayor should have a car which was 'commensurate with the dignity of his office'. The Lord Mayor's secretary, Capt. Geoffrey Bennett, pointed out that the car was required to accommodate the mayoral retinue, and not only the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress. He also reminded the objector that Lenin, after discarding all the 'trappings of Czarism', had kept a Rolls-Royce for his personal use.

Dismissing Mr Goldenberg's claim, the District Auditor held that the council and its officers had acted 'most reasonably'. There had been the most thorough investigation of the available alternatives, and a most careful comparison of costs.

Wholesaling Problems

IN view of the importance of the wholesale distributive trade, it is surprising that relatively little information concerning the trade is available from either official or private sources. A report from the Distributive Trades Economic Development Committee entitled A Look at Wholesaling fills in some gaps, albeit the information collected from a handful of firms and some discussions with members of the trade would normally be regarded as an inadequate basis for any firm conclusions.

Nevertheless, the EDC is clear about a number of deficiencies. It concludes that wholesalers in all trades face squeezed margins, not least due to large numbers of small and unprofitable orders. In many cases they operate from old and unsuitable buildings which makes it difficult to use modern mechanical handling equipment. The basic problem of the trade would seem to be the relatively large numbers of competing firms, many of them with resources too small to tackle problems they face. In part, a merger of some of these interests would help but the EDC recognizes that even where mergers and amalgamations have taken place, they have not always proved successful, significantly because in a number of cases the reorganization necessary to implement the objectives of the mergers had not been carried out.

The level of remuneration in the trade is relatively depressed and this provides little incentive for capital investment. It also means high turnover of staff. Very few firms have incentive productivity schemes but those which have are satisfied with the results. Too little time is given to the training of staffs and there is a lack of good communications.

Not surprising in the light of these conclusions, one of the subcommittees has commissioned consultants to prepare two studies which may be helpful to wholesalers. The first is a booklet about management information and accountancy systems, and the other a guide to the use of work study and payments schemes. These are to be published early in 1971.

Mintech's Forecasts too Optimistic

THE latest CBI Industrial Trends Survey - No. 38 in the series of four-monthly reviews of the economy from the Confederation - does not add greatly to current knowledge of the industrial scene; but it does largely confirm present views thereon. Although the sample size was increased and a record number of 1,762 replies were received, the survey was conducted just before the General Election, and quite clearly subsequent political events may exert some effect on industrialists' thinking regarding future prospects.

The main point to emerge from the findings is that firms were generally rather less optimistic about the business situation than they were last February. In particular, the proportion of exporters contending that their prices compared with overseas competitors - a most important factor limiting their ability to obtain export orders - has returned to the level that was recorded before devaluation. There can be no doubt that even if given the measure of cost-push inflation experienced elsewhere in the world's major economies, a continuation of the recent 11-15 per cent increases in pay must rapidly erode any competitive advantage which devaluation conferred upon British industry.

The other main finding is that there is little prospect of change in the level of manufacturing investment in the 12 months to mid-1971. In fact, the volume of investment in buildings is likely to fall and does not appear yet to have been stimulated by the slight encouragement given in the 1970 Budget. In short, the survey results confirm what the CBI and industry have long argued, that the Ministry of Technology's recent forecasts regarding industrial investment have been over-optimistic.

Monetary Policy

THE increasing emphasis being placed upon monetary policy, more especially the new concept of domestic credit expansion, poses as many problems as it solves - particularly if official circles expect the 'DCE' rule to give rise to a discipline reflecting the external balance in much the same way as the automatic gold standard system.

In a second edition of the Hobart Paper No. 44, Money in Boom and Slump, published by the Institute of Economic Affairs (8s net), Professor A. A. Walters of the London School of Economics draws attention to these dangers and contends that it is by no means

Controlling Administrative Overheads

Two further courses on 'Controlling administrative overheads' were held by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales last week at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton.

Planned to point out ways of increasing efficiency in the office, the courses traced the steps needed to evaluate, redesign, and install office systems and procedures, highlighting some of the techniques involved and emphasizing the savings which can result. All the components of a system were covered including systems design, forms, equipment and layout.

clear how the DCE concept is to be used in future monetary policy.

Attempts at short-run regulation of the money supply, in particular since 1964, have merely succeeded in retarding the rate of economic growth rather than in achieving any significant solution to the problems of the British economy. To the extent that it is used in conjunction with fiscal policy to resolve balance of payments difficulties, there is much to be said for a policy based on DCE. These techniques, however, are not practicable for resolving the basic structural weaknesses in the British economy.

The real need, as Professor Walters points out, is to avoid the initial inflationary surge and that in the longer run a policy of steady growth in the money stock is the least harmful of the various alternatives available to the Government.

Keeping Pace with Inflation

ONE of the drawbacks to many forms of insurance is that they do not keep pace with inflation. A company which writes a considerable volume of long-term sickness insurance at special rates for accountants has recently introduced an anti-inflationary option into its policies, providing a 20 per cent increase of the initial benefit every five years for those in accountancy and other professions. Once a contract has been arranged on this basis, the policyholder has the option to increase the benefit every five years irrespective of state of health at the time. The increase will still apply even though the policyholder may be off sick and claiming benefit under the policy at the time.

The company obviously has to charge for this option, but the charge is confined to the first policy. When each increasing benefit takes effect, the further premium required is simply the normal premium applicable to the extra benefit for the policyholder's age at the time.

Eligible existing policyholders are to be given the right to change to the new basis although the insurance company will require a declaration of health and, clearly, an additional premium will be payable for the inclusion of this right.

Permanent Insurance Co Ltd, which issues this policy, will not be offering this conversion to anyone over the age of 55 (for whom retirement is unlikely to be very far off), or for anyone currently insured for benefits of less than £10 per week or more than £50 per week.

Even if the increasing benefit option is not taken up, there is much to be said for periodically reviewing sickness cover if the weekly benefits now in force are not adequate in view of inflation and recent increases in earnings. The important point about this insurance is that the benefits will be paid for so long as one is incapacitated, or until the final termination date of the policy if earlier.

French and American Economies

PRESSURES on the economies of France and the United States are illustrated in recent economic survey reports published by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

The reports cover economic policies, trends and prospects in each country, and in the case of France it is observed that up to mid-summer of last year the national economy had been characterized by growing demand pressures, capacity limitations and a relatively high rate of price and wage increases. Despite buoyant exports, the balance of payments was in heavy deficit with soaring imports and an outflow of capital. This situation was greatly influenced by inflationary expectations, speculation concerning parity changes, and uncertainty caused by domestic political events.

Apart from fiscal and budgetary measures taken by the French Government, the OECD considers that it might be desirable to ease the monetary policy, but in the light of its possible effect on the balance of payments – in particular, on capital account – developments in other financial centres must be borne in mind.

For this reason there is great interest in the ability of the United States to follow a path of smooth development in conditions of stability, and as the survey report on that country states, 'improvements in price and foreign trade performance have been disappointingly slow to appear'. The American authorities, however, aim at reducing the rise in prices in 1970, and reviving the growth of output later in the year.

Little advance in activity has been seen in the first half of the year, and there could well be a brief further decline, but the second half should see a moderate recovery, influenced by fiscal policy decisions already taken, and assuming some easing of monetary conditions.

Knitwear Industry Not Meeting Export Potential

WHAT must be one of the most voluminous and comprehensive of published industrial surveys, is that of the hosiery and knitwear 'Little Neddy' out this week. The industry is revealed as comprising about a thousand firms with some 127,000 employees and an annual output approaching £400 million. The average unit size is small and more than half the firms employ less than 100 people, two-thirds of them operating with assets of less than £250,000.

These facts, together with an extended discussion of the prospects for the industry in the 1970s, are given in Hosiery and Knitwear in the 1970s (HMSO 45s), prepared for the industry's Economic Development Committee by Associated Industrial Consultants Ltd. The report analyses the industry's potential at home and abroad against the background of changing economic and social conditions. It considers the likely changes in industrial structure, productivity, costs and prices over the next decade.

The report predicts that UK manufacturers' sales will increase by 7 per cent per annum in the period 1968-73, moderating to 4 per cent per annum during 1973-78. This compares with an average expected growth of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum for the clothing industry as a whole forecast in the companion study for the clothing EDC. The report observes that export prospects are bright, especially for high quality goods, but it suggests that despite the remarkable recent expansion of export sales, manufacturers are not yet achieving the levels of exports of which the industry is capable. In particular, the report emphasizes the serious deficiencies in the industry's export record compared to its major competitors'.

It is estimated that exports are likely to increase to £97 million in 1973 and £153 million in 1978, representing an annual average growth rate of 11.9 per cent. On the other hand, import competition will be substantial in all categories, the greatest threat occurring at the cheaper and lighter end of the market. Imports are predicted to increase from £85 million in 1973 to £134 million by 1978.

THIS IS MY LIFE

The New Outcasts

by An Industrious Accountant

TIMES have changed for the company accountant/secretary. Somehow his public image has altered. From being regarded by shareholders as a revered father-figure in his ivory tower of intellectual eminence, he has descended to being the expert who guessed wrong - the scapegoat for the sins of others. Should there be a brain-drain within the foreseeable future, it can be foretold now.

Personally, I've noticed the clouds darkening ominously for nearly a year. Prior to that our shareholders smiled or nodded respectfully as they passed by in the aisles of the store or on the staircase leading to the registrar's office. Silver-haired but dignified grandfathers stopped to murmur: 'Good show that, old boy; the year's profits are rising nicely.' Fragile old ladies with beringed fingers whispered: 'So nice to get a bigger dividend cheque last week; the company's always such a standby for us'; and I'd display a smile of kindly benevolence, like Moses after a particularly good collection of morning manna.

More worldly types hailed me with an extrovert enthusiasm tinged with dutiful appreciation of our professional mystique. 'Bought your five-bob shares for a song years ago, just to have a flutter on local industry', they smiled. 'Made a packet on the last rise, selling the rights issue, though, of course, we hung on to the main holding.'

The financial men, the local bank manager, or representative of a pension fund which bought a solid block of our equity, would drop in to my office. 'What about the future, eh? Prospects looking good down the road?' they would murmur with a touch of deference. To them I would show my wall-graph, plotting annual profits before tax against share prices over the last quarter of a century, highlighting the key years, at which they would nod with shrewd judgement, like the Hebrew spearmen when Samson told them just when he really cut loose with that ass's jawbone.

Even old Lady M, our most formidable shareholder, unbent sufficiently to confide to me her disposition of her main holding to her grandson. 'Pick a good small company to invest in and hold on while it ploughs back its profits; the boy will thank me when he's older', she beamed, and left with a scathing reference to War Loan and an uncalled-for aspersion on no less than three Prime Ministers.

Shareholders in general supported us by giving us their custom, if they lived locally, and they were chatty with the salesmen. They talked about the spring sales going well, and asked familiarly about Trevor's promotion, or our shirt factory's new line in summer-wear, or the queues in the grocery self-service; but they knew little or nothing about the esoteric mysteries of higher finance. These they left confidently to us, the specialists.

But not any longer. Not after publication of last year's results, or the steady decline in the share price, or the gloomy forecast of the chairman in his speech at the annual general meeting. Now they accost me brusquely in the corridor, or burst belligerently into my assistant's office, or write abusive if not libellous letters.

Even the little old ladies behave as if we'd endeavoured to molest them, while the tough young men who bulled too long as good as assert that we deliberately swindled them, and the money-skilled men who should know better are polite but distant.

I'm thinking my next assignment will probably include a hooded cloak, a small handbell, and a whining 'unclean, unclean' along the corridors.

Homecoming

A Staff Member's View of the Return to Moorgate Place

SO these are your temporary offices. When do you move back to Moorgate Place? How often, over the years, has the question been asked? How often has one been tempted to answer that 'a thousand ages are as an evening gone' in the time-scale of a profession!

All that is past. A simple tablet at the entrance to the Great Hall records that the new Chartered Accountants' Hall was opened by Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, on May 6th, 1970. For those who took part, this event was the climax of the spring and early summer. But for many others - members, staff, building workers and passers-by - there have been other personal, special landmarks.

Early in the year, the shutters and scaffolding which had concealed the building began to come down. At last something could be seen of the architect's exterior ideas in full scale. And the talk began. Personal acquaintances and Goswell Road visitors, old and young, spoke about it with pleasure and enjoyment. What a relief! What a change from all those glass boxes.

Ironically, tucked away in Goswell Road, few of us knew what progress was being made. Indeed, to many of the staff the words 'Moorgate Place' were just a name on the letterhead. The old hands had spent a large slice of a normal working life in 'temporary' accommodation and had long since concluded that they would believe they were back when they arrived.

Library back first

And the last out were the first back. The library, which had moved some four years before, returned well before the formal opening and operated amid the noise and distraction of final building work. Its former home, with its 'Bridge of Sighs' and nautical lanterns, at the Moorgate Place end of the building, was destined to be the Members' Room. Its new home, at the Copthall Avenue end, has also given a seagoing impression to some visitors. A lowish ceiling with air ducts and the murmur of the air conditioning unit create the feeling of being aboard ship.

Within this spacious area is a complete reference library. Members have commented on the fitting combination of modernity and traditional library qualities. The Queen Mother is said to have been talking about it long after passing on to other parts of the building.

If the library - symbol of a learned profession -

began the awakening of the new building, the formal opening gave us the headquarters as the ceremonial symbol of a major profession. The public rooms and an illustrative office floor layout went on show as they were to be used. On the evenings following the opening they were seen by hundreds of members, with relatives and friends.

Those of us who escorted parties, answered questions and listened to comments, became thoroughly familiar with our new home. We passed from the completely new Great Hall, through rooms in the old building which retained their former style, through the basement restaurant, the library, the office layout, and finally to the remarkable transformation of the Oak Hall into an acoustically perfect Council Chamber. Here, curving ranks of seats, like a continental legislature, present a simple composition in light and dark materials. Then one's eyes move to the flank walls and are caught by the colourful vigour of two Ceylonese tapestries, gay with huge butterflies.

Stately home on view

Day by day members arrived, were received by the officers and were shown around. Day by day there began that accumulation of incidents which gives a building a personality in the minds of its users. The President's chair was tried for size. The Council Chamber acoustics were tested – sometimes in unexpected ways. Other members moved among the assembled silver in the Great Hall, discreetly upending pieces in a search for the inscription which recorded their donation or that of their firm.

Some young members joked about the allegorical murals of the former 19th-century Council Chamber. Others who remembered the chamber and the old library expressed satisfaction that their character had been preserved.

Then there was the lady, over 40 years a member, making a personal unabridged tour under the guidance of a staff member, of 40 years standing, both recalling the days of the Hon. George Colville, of Lord Plender, Sir Nicholas Waterhouse and other architects of the Institute's status.

But although the older visitors clothed the building again with memories of the past, it remained for these days incomplete. Like a stately home it lacked something. The hall tables seemed to be set for guests who might never come, the committee rooms for meetings which might never be held, the restaurant for parties of the imagination, and the desks for absent workers. The headquarters was on exhibition and for this reason fell short of the architect's intentions. It had been designed to be used, not only to be looked at. This perhaps, explained a repeated minority criticism – that the new parts of the building were too severe for a member's expectation of a professional headquarters.

Where were the ornaments, the portraits, the richness and the panellings of traditional large halls? Should one not have had more than the textural differences and one bold coloured carpet in the restaurant? Yet, seen as a setting for people, the new rooms take on a different aspect, as those who attended the annual meeting and those who sat at candle-lit tables for the President's dinner have seen.

Unobtrusively, too, the committee rooms and Council Chamber came into use. Behind the scenes, the catering, building management and maintenance staffs were fully engaged.

The staff arrive

So we came to the last great stage – the removal of staff and their materials. Not all were to leave Goswell Road. Nor was much of the furniture and equipment transported. The three office floors were being furnished uniformly on open-plan lines to achieve the greatest economy of space in acceptable conditions.

Perhaps it was inevitable that some staff should have had misgivings about this, both practical and personal. Would open-plan be tolerable from the point of view of noise? Would it be functionally practicable? Moreover, most people have grown up in a world which accords status in work by separate offices of different sizes, by differences in furniture and furnishings and by other similar symbols. Open planning as carried out at Moorgate Place abandons this. Only those officials and staff who need privacy for the effective carrying out of their work have separate offices.

On Friday, June 5th, we packed. By mid-day on Monday, June 8th, we were almost fully operational. The stream of visitors to Goswell Road rapidly changed its course. The foyers and inquiry office became alive with movement. In the restaurant, the first customers began to take lunch and the numbers served daily are growing fast. Members appeared, working in the cool calm of the Members' Room, sheltering shirt-sleeved from the June heat.

And the staff reactions? Most have taken well to the new layout, with its teak veneered furniture, tall white storage cupboards and screens of dull red or gold, all on quiet green carpet, lit by shaded windows and diffused lights, and scattered with plants. The arrangement of furniture breaks down the expanse of the rooms but also provides the longer prospect and the spaciousness which small separate offices lack. It is pleasant to be back in the City again and the building itself is so impressive that the staff would not want to leave it. This is their tribute to the architect.

Disciplines of open planning

Open planning does, of course, impose its disciplines. Tidiness is essential. It is also essential to resist the temptation to call to someone just a few yards away. You walk to them or, odd as it may seem at first, use the telephone. But one soon gets used to being thoughtful, and the most distracting noise of these early weeks has been the continuing contractors' work on the floors which are to be let.

The architect, William Whitfield, can now see his creation substantially complete – a striking and admired contribution to the neighbourhood and a fitting setting for the manifold work of the Institute. But for the Institute itself there remain two further stages. The top two floors represent an investment which will begin to make itself felt when they are occupied. And in the basement, there still has to be completed a further most important service for members – the snack bar which is designed to complement the restaurant and to offer both additional facilities for members and an additional incentive for them to come and to use their new headquarters for themselves.

Business with pleasure

It bears repeating that this may be a building to be admired; above all it is a building for members to use and to enjoy, to explore and to entertain in. Those who live and work away from London may be able to do this only occasionally. The many thousands of London area members really should not miss the opportunity which they have so close at hand and, as the district society programme will include meetings at Moorgate Place, they will be able to combine business and pleasure.

No real harm will be done if we of the staff think affectionately of Moorgate Place as the home to which we have returned. The only harm will be if members see it as a place for us and not as a place for them; or if they think of the structure as 'the Institute'. We and the building are here to serve them and their needs.

Partnership Analogies in Company Liquidations

by G. R. BRETTEN, M.A., LL.B.

SINCE the compulsory winding up of a company is not a matter to be lightly undertaken, it is to be expected that the grounds for such action should be clearly and narrowly defined. Paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 222 of the Companies Act 1948 conform to this expectation. Paragraph (f), however, which provides for winding up where it is 'just and equitable' so to do, has been deliberately cast in broad terms, and it has been liberally construed by the Courts. The provision has in practice acquired a special significance in so far as in appropriate circumstances it has been interpreted by the Courts so as to permit the application by analogy to the compulsory winding up of companies of the principles governing the dissolution of partnerships.

Dissolution of partnerships

The Partnership Act 1890 sets out in considerable detail the grounds upon which a partnership may be dissolved. Whereas some of these grounds are necessarily applicable only to partnerships, others are capable of being considered as relevant by analogy to the winding up of companies. Thus, it is pertinent to note that section 33 (1) provides that, subject to any agreement between the partners, every partnership will be dissolved as regards all the partners by the death or bankruptcy of any partner.

Automatic dissolution will also follow, pursuant to section 34, on the happening of any event which makes it unlawful for the business of the firm to be carried on or for the members of the firm to carry it on in partnership. More significant for present purposes is section 35, which provides for dissolution by the Court in the following circumstances:

- (i) when a partner, other than the partner suing, becomes in any way, other than by reason of mental disorder, permanently incapable of performing his part of the partnership contract;
- (ii) when a partner, other than the partner suing, has been guilty of such conduct as, in the opinion of the Court, regard being had to the nature of the business, is calculated prejudicially to affect the carrying on of the business;
- (iii) when a partner, other than the partner suing, wilfully or persistently commits a breach of the partnership agreement, or otherwise so conducts himself in matters relating to the partnership business that it is not reasonably practicable for the other partner or partners to carry on the business in partnership with him;

- (iv) when the business of the partnership can only be carried on at a loss;
- (v) whenever in any case circumstances have arisen which, in the opinion of the Court, render it just and equitable that the partnership be dissolved.

The foundation of partnership is the mutual confidence and co-operation of the partners, and it is evident that pre-eminence among the grounds for dissolution of a partnership is the breakdown from a business point of view of the relationship between the partners. The Companies Acts, in contrast, make no direct reference to the failure of the relationship between members and directors of a company as a ground for winding up. Yet compatibility and co-operation among members and directors will undeniably be of the utmost importance where the association is in fact nothing more than 'a partnership disguised as a company'. It is in this connection that the Courts have construed the 'just and equitable' ground so as to permit reference to partnership principles for guidance in exercising their discretion to order the compulsory winding up of companies.

Basic decision

The basic decision from which this branch of the law has developed is that of the Court of Appeal in Re Yenidje Tobacco Co Ltd ([1916] 2 Ch. 426). The facts were that Weinberg and Rothman were the only shareholders and directors of a private company carrying on business as tobacconist and cigarette manufacturer. The shares were equally held and Weinberg and Rothman had equal rights of management. There was provision under the articles of association for reference to arbitration of disputes or differences which it proved impossible otherwise to resolve. The relationship between the parties deteriorated to such an extent that an expensive arbitration was necessary, to the award of which Rothman refused to give effect, and he also brought an action against Weinberg for fraud. Moreover, as the parties were not on speaking terms, all communications relating to the company's business had to be made through a third person.

Despite these difficulties the company prospered. Weinberg, however, successfully presented a petition contending that as there was virtual deadlock in the management of the company it was just and equitable that a winding-up order should be made. Lord Cozens-Hardy, MR, having reviewed the difficulties which beset the company and concluded that the proper conduct of its business was no longer possible, expressly admitted the pertinence of the law governing the dissolution of partnership, commenting:

'I think that in a case like this we are bound to say that circumstances which would justify the winding up of a partnership between these two by action are circumstances which should induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under the just and equitable clause and to wind up the company.'

The same position was taken by Warrington, LJ, although he more restrictively defined the circumstances in which the Court should have regard to the partnership analogy. The relevant extract from the judgment reads:

'I am prepared to say that in a case like the present, where there are only two persons interested, where there are no shareholders other than those two, where there are no means of overruling by the action of a general meeting of shareholders the trouble which is occasioned by the quarrels of the two directors and shareholders, the company ought to be wound up if there exists such a ground as would be sufficient for the dissolution of a private partnership at the suit of one of the partners against the other.'

Subsequent developments

The Courts in applying the principle admitted in Re Yenidje Tobacco Co Ltd have not required absolute conformity with the circumstances which existed in that case and with the conditions postulated by Warrington, LJ. Indeed, in Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd ([1924] AC 783) the Privy Council applied the principle to warrant the winding up of a public company, although it must be added that the Court placed emphasis on the fact that the company was clearly 'a domestic and family concern'. The petitioners, unlike Weinberg, were not directors of the company, and there was no question of deadlock in management, since the managing director had a preponderating voting power.

The substance of the complaint was that the directors had neglected to call meetings, to submit accounts, or to recommend dividends, so that by keeping the petitioners in ignorance of the company's affairs they might acquire the petitioners' shares at an undervalue. The Privy Council found that the affairs of the company had been so conducted 'that confidence in its management was, and is, and that most justifiably, at an end'. This broad ground was, by analogy with partnership law, held sufficient to warrant the compulsory winding up of the company.

Recently, in Re Fildes Bros Ltd ([1970] 1 All ER 923; The Accountant, April 30th), Megarry, J, was called upon to determine whether the partnership analogy could properly be made in the case of a private company in which two brothers held equal interests and of which each was a director. The brother opposing the petition had a casting vote at both directors' and shareholders' meetings, and, to the exclusion of the other, was completely in control of the day-to-day running of the company's business.

While Megarry, J, conceded that he was aware of no authority where the partnership concept had been applied to a company of which one of two directors was little more than a sleeping partner, he took the view that it could properly be extended to such a case if (a) the conduct complained of in fact warranted a fundamental lack of confidence between the directors and (b) the breakdown in their relationship was not exclusively attributable to the petitioner.

It will be apparent that cases such as Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd and, less obviously, Re Fildes Bros Ltd, are somewhat removed from the normal partnership, where close co-operation between the partners in the everyday running of the business is the very foundation of the enterprise. More closely allied to this situation are cases such as Re Davis and Collett Ltd ([1935] 1 Ch. 693) and Re Lundie Brothers Ltd ([1965] 2 All ER 692), each of which concerned a small private company of which the petitioner was a substantial shareholder and active director. In each case one of the grounds of complaint was that the petitioner had been forced out of the management of the company's affairs. The analogy with partnership was compelling in both cases, and winding-up orders were made.

Contractual rights

When a Court makes a winding-up order it is in effect prescribing the termination of the contractual relationship between the members inter se, and the members and the company, which is ordained by section 20 (1) of the Companies Act 1948. In determining whether in the circumstances it is appropriate to make such an order on the petition of a contributory the Court should, therefore, have regard to the provisions of that contract. This point was made in the following terms by Simonds, J, in Re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd ([1937] Ch. 392):

'Whether it be a matter of articles of association or articles of partnership the rights of the parties are determined by those articles, and the question whether it is right for me applying here the principles of partnership to the question of dissolution to wind up this company or not largely depends on what are the contractual rights of the parties as determined by the articles of association in this case. Accordingly, when I come to consider the allegations which are made in the petition, I must be guided by what are the legal rights of the parties as determined by the bargain into which they entered.'

The material facts of the case were that Mr Cuthbert

Cooper and his two elder sons had in 1913 formed a private limited company, of which they were the only directors and shareholders. On the death of Mr Cooper in 1930, his three younger sons were by his will appointed his executors and he bequeathed his shares in the company to them. The elder sons, who were then the sole directors of the company, refused to register the younger sons as shareholders or to assign any reason for their refusal. Since the articles of association provided that the directors in their absolute and uncontrolled discretion might decline to register any transfer of shares without assigning any reason therefor, and as there was no evidence of the improper exercise by the directors of their discretion, Simonds, J, held that, notwithstanding the argument that it might be right to apply principles of partnership to the question of winding up, there were in the circumstances no just and equitable grounds for winding up the company.

Bankruptcy of member

The reasoning in Re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd was approved and applied in Re K/9 Meat Supplies (Guildford) Ltd ([1966] 3 All ER 320), where a member and former director of the company, at the instance of his trustee in bankruptcy, petitioned for its winding up. One of the circumstances relied upon by the petitioner was that he had been adjudicated bankrupt some months before the presentation of the petition, and that, subject to any agreement to the contrary, a partnership is automatically dissolved by the bankruptcy of any one of the partners. Pennycuik, J, held that, granted that the company should be treated for the purposes of winding up as if it were a partnership, the Court must have regard to the terms of the articles of association. As the articles expressly covered the event of bankruptcy by providing for the transmission of the bankrupt's shares, this circumstance could not constitute the basis of a winding-up order.

Settled course of conduct

In Re Fildes Bros Ltd, the latest reported decision concerning these matters, Megarry, J, developed the reasoning of Re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd so as to require that the Court should have regard not merely to the terms of the articles of association, 'but also to what the parties are shown to have agreed in any other manner'. The judgment continues:

'It cannot be just and equitable to allow one party to come to the Court and require the Court to make an order which disregards his contractual obligations. The same, I think, must apply to a settled and accepted course of conduct between the parties, whether or not cast into the mould of a contract.'

Applying this proposition to the facts of the case before him, Megarry, J, concluded that the refusal of one of the brothers to depart from what had been the settled practice for many years did not of itself constitute a ground for winding up, and should not be taken into account with the other matters set out in the petition.

Insolvency of company

In Re Expanded Plugs Ltd ([1966] 1 All ER 877) the partnership analogy was invoked by the petitioner not only to support the grounds upon which he relied in his petition but also to surmount the objection that on the winding up of the company there would be no surplus available for distribution among shareholders. The petitioner's argument that this objection should not be taken in those cases where the Court may properly make reference to partnership principles was dismissed by Plowman, J, on the basis that: 'While it is true that the partnership analogy may be of assistance in certain circumstances in considering whether it is just and equitable to wind a company up, the analogy must not be pressed too far and, in particular, it cannot . . . be invoked for the purpose of giving a locus standi to a petitioner who, by company law, is denied one.'

The drawing of this sharp distinction between partnership law and company law was justified by Plowman, J, on two grounds. First, that whereas the liability of an ordinary partner is unlimited so that he has an obvious financial interest in the dissolution of the partnership in the event of its insolvency, in the case of a limited company a fully-paid member's liability cannot be increased by further trading. Secondly, while an insolvent partnership cannot be dissolved at the instance of creditors, they have the right to petition for the winding up of an insolvent company, and are in fact the only persons with a financial interest in doing so.

Minority shareholders

The Courts have refused to extend the principle of Re Yenidje Tobacco Co Ltd to cases where the petitioner has such a relatively minor interest in the company that his relationship with the other shareholders and with the directors cannot reasonably be characterized as that of partnership. Thus, partnership concepts were not applied in Charles Forte Investments Ltd v. Amanda ([1963] 2 All ER 940), where the petitioner held only one seventy-fifth of the capital of the company and took no part in its management. The decision of Pennycuik, J, in Re K/9 Meat Supplies (Guildford) Ltd is to a similar effect. It should not, therefore, be assumed that the epithet 'private' of itself warrants the application of the principles of partnership law to the winding up of companies.

Conclusion

It appears from an examination of the reported decisions that partnership concepts may only be applied to the winding up of a company if the enterprise is, in substance, a partnership although registered as a company, and neither the articles of association nor the previous conduct of the parties precludes the application of partnership concepts. If the petitions in Charles Forte Investments Ltd v. Amanda and Re K/9 Meat Supplies (Guildford) Ltd had been brought, not by minority shareholders, but by members with substantial interests in the enterprises, the Courts could possibly have referred to partnership law in order to determine the propriety of making winding-up orders.

The cases demonstrate the fallacy of the assumption that the laws relating to companies and those relating to partnerships are necessarily and in all respects separate and distinct. They also evidence the broad construction which the Courts have placed upon the 'just and equitable' provision in section 222 (f) of the Companies Act 1948. Since private companies of the 'partnership' type have been created in large numbers (principally in order to obtain the fiscal advantages which the corporate structure offered to the small business enterprise until recently), it will be appreciated that these developments in the law are of considerable practical significance.

The Rise of the Accounting Profession: Volume I (1896-1936)

by JOHN L. CAREY.

American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, $8.50.

The rise of the accountancy profession in the United States of America owes much to the British example, and the industrial revolution which catapulted England into an unrivalled prosperity anticipated by nearly half a century the corresponding turn of events in the United States. America had emerged from the Civil War with a predominantly agricultural economy, and as late as 1900 the value of its agricultural products exceeded those of its industry. By contrast, London remained the recognized financial centre of the world and in the 1870s bank deposits in London were three times those in New York.

Substantial amounts of British capital were invested in the development of the American economy in the late nineteenth century, and several well-known British firms of chartered accountants established offices in New York and other cities of the United States. A meeting in New York in 1886 between Mr Edwin Guthrie, a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, and a group of American accountants led to the foundation of the 'American Association of Public Accountants' which was incorporated on September 20th, 1887, with a membership of 31.

The development of the profession within the United States was hampered by several factors not encountered in the United Kingdom. The vast distances involved, and the lack of effective communications, made it extremely difficult for an organization based in New York to render effective services to members elsewhere. Friction persisted for many years between the American Association - or, as it later became, The American Institute of Accountants - which favoured the creation of a national body with a single standard of professional competence and ethics, and those persons who had been licensed as 'certified public accountants' under the domestic legislation of the various States within the Union, whose standards for accreditation were by no means uniform.

There is also a reference to the antics of that typically American institution, the 'diploma mill', which functioned circa 1920 in a State which at that time had no CPA law, and was, therefore, able to flood the market with bogus certificates.

John Carey, who retired from the post of Secretary of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants in 1969, devoted the whole of his working life to the service of the profession, and is the only non-accountant to be honoured with the Institute's 'Award for Distinguished Service'. The history of this period of American professional organization is one which he is uniquely qualified to write, and the appearance of the second volume (which is to complete the story from 1936 to the present day) is awaited with interest.

Studies in Management Information

General Educational Trust of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 105s.

Between 1966 and 1968 The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales produced a series of booklets by various authors covering a wide range of subjects that can conveniently be classified under the general heading of 'Management Accounting'. The acknowledged practical experience of the authors ensured that they would deal with their subjects with the needs of working managers and accountants in mind, and the justification for this approach has been proved by the popularity of these booklets since they were first published.

The Institute's General Educational Trust, under whose aegis they appeared, has now republished the series in a single volume in response to suggestions that they should be made available in this format. Although they have been reprinted in their original form, it is interesting and gratifying to see that despite the high obsolescence rate that afflicts published works in some other areas of accountancy, none of them show any signs of suffering from the ravages of time.

Because of their universal excellence it would perhaps be invidious to make comparisons, but this reviewer found particular interest in the contributions by S. V. Bishop on 'Business Planning and Control' and Stanley Dixon on 'The Case for Marginal Costing'. The other sections deal with

A Dictionary for Accountants

Fourth Edition, by ERIC L. KOHLER.

Prentice-Hall, £9 (UK).

The development of business upon an international scale, and the impact of wider share ownership, have together increased immeasurably the number of people with whom it is necessary for accountants to be able to communicate. In the course of developing the profession, some words have acquired a technical meaning which may appear remote from their ordinary significance, and others have been given a special significance in consequence of legal decisions. The need for a work such as that under review cannot, therefore, be denied.

Mr Kohler's dictionary is a compendious work of some 450 fair-sized pages, but it is debatable to whom it is really addressed. Although entitled '— for Accountants', it contains — doubtless in the interests of completeness — a number of terms which even a first-year student should find no difficulty in defining adequately, and which might be of more assistance to the layman who is occasionally brought into contact with accounting terminology.

Certain entries, particularly those with a mathematical significance, are accorded treatment more appropriate to an encyclopedia than a dictionary; this particularly applies to such items as compound interest formula, which is defined with the aid of four full pages of mathematical tables; and logarithm, which extends over five pages and is defined with the aid of tables and of the words characteristic and mantissa, which both rate separate entries elsewhere.

There are a number of American concepts, for example, a 'downstairs merger' and 'non-assessable capital stock', which have little or no significance on this side of the Atlantic. Mr Kohler also finds separate meanings for negligence and gross negligence, although the latter was referred to on the English Bench many years ago as 'negligence with the addition of a vituperative epithet'.

LETTER FROM AMERICA

Waiting on the Auditor's Word

from Our New York Correspondent

WITH the fortunes of the largest unit trust in Europe hanging in the balance, the delays in publishing the annual report of Investors Overseas Services Ltd encouraged the growth of a cloud of rumour and counter-rumour that is only now being dispersed. The report had been promised in early May. It then became known that Arthur Andersen & Co had a team of 20 accountants at work on the report at Perney-Voltaire, just across the French border from the Geneva administrative offices, and 4,000 miles from the company's legal base in Toronto.

There was plenty of evidence of internal disagreement on the content of the report, and one of the IOS 'insiders' began making unfavourable comments concerning the basis of asset valuation adopted by the auditors. Tension was raised by rumours that this year's expenses were even higher than last year's estimate of some £20 million equivalent, while the total funds managed by the company (approximating £750 million equivalent) were said to have abruptly stopped growing.

The report finally appeared in the American papers on Sunday, June 14th. It was avidly scanned by those who remembered Bernard Cornfeld, a bare ten years ago, as a social worker from Brooklyn who had struck the idea of tempting European investors into the American stock-market, and had worked out a way of selling IOS funds to them without running foul of Securities and Exchange Commission regulations.

It provided no hints of the conflict between Mr

Cornfeld's flamboyance — with his favourite pastrami dinners brought to Geneva each week by jet from New York — and the conservatism of his successor as chairman, Sir Eric Wyndham White. But it caused enough concern to lead the Toronto, Montréal, and London Stock Exchanges to suspend trading in the company's shares, and to convince a powerful group of international bankers that their negotiations in Paris for a partnership with IOS would have to be abandoned.

The key to this sudden reversal was the auditor's finding that insufficient information had been provided as to the beneficiaries of IOS loans totalling more than the equivalent of £10 million. 'More specific identification', the auditors' qualification requires, 'as being necessary to make the accompanying financial statements complete'. The New York Times referred to the situation as 'a story of unusual corporate generosity to insiders and friends'.

The forthright handling of this difficult situation will be applauded by all those who have recently been hearing too much comment on the inability of members of the accountancy profession to remain objective in their judgement of their clients' accounts. In the circumstances, the IOS annual meeting — to be held in Toronto, as this letter is being printed, on June 30th — will be watched with special interest, and may well bring to light more of the information sought by the auditors and surely needed by investors and creditors.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

A Subjective Form of Accounts

FOR both the measurement of productivity and for management purposes in general, the internal records of an organization need to be arranged (as, indeed, many are) to enable the yardsticks to be applied with a minimum of analysis and calculation. This statement is relevant both for the planned and for the competitive elements of the economy. But at a national level, to aid planning and the assessment of the results of policy, information which shows the interaction of different facets of the economy are needed.

In an interesting paper, presented in April at an ICWA East Midland Area Conference at Nottingham University, Dr J. M. S. Risk, B.COM., PH.D., C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., suggested that a 'subjective form of accounts' (of which a specimen is attached) might well be required of all economic entities whose expense (including materials etc.) exceeded a certain minimum amount per annum. This would apply both to income-earning organizations and to others. The minimum figure would be established after finding the percentage of all expense which would be covered by the units above an experimental minimum level of expense.

If, for example, entities with total annual expense above £100,000 accounted for 85 per cent of all expense each year, then such amount might well form a practicable basis. The units in question would be asked to submit annually a statement of account in a prescribed form, devised after detailed inquiry and consultation. The object would be to provide the maximum of relevant usable information with the minimum amount of administrative work.

Information for whom?

Lord Pilkington, chairman of Pilkington Brothers Ltd, has stated that he prepares three annual statements: one for shareholders; one for senior executives; and one for other employees in the group.

Some companies prepare a simplified form of annual account for the benefit of shareholders and employees who are not versed in the reading of formal accounting documents prepared to meet statutory requirements.

Additional items of information

A number of companies already publish more than the legal minimum. For example, Greenall Whitley & Co Ltd (brewers and distillers) provide a separate figure for repairs to properties. ICI - winner of one of The Accountant Annual Awards this year - show a separate figure for raw materials and purchased services. One company which goes somewhat further is the Transport Development Group Ltd, which analyses its total income as follows:

Wages, salaries and pensions	17,912
Services and materials	18,376
Repairs and maintenance	4,414
Depreciation	3,315
Operating and overhead expenses	4,435
	£48,452

Census of production for 1970

The Business Statistics Office is reported as planning a new annual series of censuses of production, beginning in 1971 and starting with firms in mining and manufacturing. Among the questions to be included will be some referring to:

- (1) wages and salaries;
- (2) work done by other firms, transport costs and certain other expenses;
- (3) total purchases.

Revenue is to be stated as follows:

- (1) total sales and work done;
- (2) goods merchanted or factored;
- (3) receipts for services rendered and certain other receipts (and payments).

In addition, questions will be asked on capital expenditure and stocks, among other items of information.

Subjective form of accounts

It seems clear that the country is moving towards the publication of a subjective form of accounts, possibly along the lines of the accompanying example.

In the subjective form of accounts all the items of expense are 'primary' expenses; that is, they consist of one type of item only. No 'composite' expenses appear; that is, a heading which includes more than one type of primary expense, such as repairs and maintenance which may include both labour and materials. If desired, separate columns can be provided for distribution, selling and administration expense. A further column could be used for charges from any head office which may exist, or for research and development work, if such expense relates to work being done for the benefit of future years rather than for the current year.

The general arrangement of the subjective statement should assist with book-keeping operations, however the data processing may be carried out. The first four items show total payments in respect of employees. The total employee items, when added to the profit (line 23) shows the net added value created. This is the same thing as deducting from sales the material and all other expense, except for employee expense. What may be called the 'gross' added value is obtained by deducting from sales only the direct material. Under the production column, item 15 shows the total cost of factory labour and overhead - that is, the 'conversion costs'.

Line 19 shows the cost of work transferred into warehouse. If standard costs have been prepared, the total of line 19 under 'production' can be compared with the standard value of the work produced. If the change in work in progress is substantial, it may be apportioned over items 1 through 16 in order to reflect total factory expense under primary account headings for comparison with other years, or with a budget for any following year.

The expense of any work of a capital nature done by a firm's employees would need to be adjusted according to circumstances.

Item 13 for 'Other expense' would be expanded as found necessary; for example, to show payments to outside contractors for maintenance work, overhaul of machinery, and so on.

Information for employees

The subjective form of accounts provides a useful basis for the provision of information for employees because it is easy to follow and provides a good deal of data in a manner which can be compared from year to year, either in respect of a single company or for several companies; or, indeed, for a whole industry.

Group Lotus

GLAMOUR is something seen by other people in other people. Those with glamour have to work hard at keeping it. The same goes for so-called 'glamour companies' like Group Lotus Car Companies Ltd. Lotus is the name that comes immediately to the tongue in terms of sports cars and racing cars. Mr Colin Chapman, the company's chairman, is a 'personality' in the business. He held 2,877,635 shares in the company at the last balance sheet date; and the shares which currently stand at 20s on the stock-market have stood at more than twice that figure.

This suggests that some of the early glamour that other people saw in the Lotus company soon after the shares were originally marketed, has worn off. But the glamour was always a matter for other people. The Lotus organization itself is subject to all the usual problems of management and finance and production and effort. Mr Chapman was awarded the CBE in the New Year Honours, not for glamour but for services to export, at which point this column must get down to its business and criticize immediately the use of two juxtaposed columnar charts in the Lotus report. One is headed 'Cars Manufactured' and the other 'Cars Exported', and the first look at the two side-by-side charts suggests that Lotus exports everything—or nearly everything. The 'export' chart is half the scale of the 'manufactured' chart.

Lotus export just under half the cars they make. That surely is a sound enough performance to be presented in a straightforward way.

But glamour and gloss there is in the Group Lotus report, with its coloured picture sections either side of the prosaically presented accounts themselves. In the original the current figures are in black on the grey paper background and the comparative figures in blue. The presentation is clear and concise.

Hard graft

Now the production has risen over six years in terms of cars produced, and in turnover, is shown in the 'Table of Comparative Figures 1964-69' included in the reprint. It can also be seen that, despite higher turnover, profits in 1969 and net worth terms were, in the past year, back to 1967 level.

That is where the glamour goes out and the hard graft comes in. In the late summer of last year Lotus had their first strike. Mr Chapman comments 'No single factor was the cause of our problem but certainly a lack of definition in our labour policies and communication procedures contributed'. As a result the board has devoted a great deal of time to preparing a 'Works Charter with improved conditions of employment and scales of remuneration'. In addition, the works council is enabling the board to participate in effective communication with employees to bring about further improvements.

With Mr Chapman on the board are Mr F. R. Bushell, F.C.A., group financial director, Mr D. A. Austin, managing director, and Mr P. R. Kirwan-Taylor, F.C.A. The operations of the group are through Lotus Cars Ltd which is the main prestige touring car production company; Lotus Cars (Sales), the marketing and distributing concern; Lotus Cars (Service), the after-sales service organization; and Lotus Components, the racing-car end of the group supplying Formula II and Formula III racing-cars to 'Team Lotus', a company in which directors of Group Lotus Car Companies control 82.5 per cent of the capital.

High stocks

The directors' report states that under an agreement dated September 26th, 1968, between Group Lotus Car Companies and Team Lotus, amounts have been advanced to Team Lotus and indebtedness incurred by that company from Group Lotus in connection with the racing activities of Team Lotus from which Group Lotus derives benefit. In view of those benefits, no interest has been charged on the amounts due by Team Lotus but a charge of £20,000 has been made by Team Lotus for services provided to Group Lotus. The amount due at the year-end and repayment arrangements for it are dealt with in Note 4b to the accounts.

In the accounts the substantial rise in stocks will be noted. It is explained in the directors' report that holdings of certain items of raw materials and work in progress at the balance sheet date exceeded previous established levels, in some instances by substantial amounts, due to programme dislocation. Steps taken to reduce these higher levels began to become effective in April of this year.

The management anticipates achieving, with the assistance of newly installed computer procedures, a controlled run down of stockholdings to more usual levels by next September, and thereafter to hold stocks at those levels. The report states that 'notwithstanding the relatively high levels of stocks, these are being utilized in the normal course of business and the management is satisfied that no further stock provisions at January 4th, 1970, are required'.

Location advantage

The operations of Group Lotus are carried out from a 55-acre site on an airfield at Hethel, just south of Norwich. A major advantage of the works' location is the availability to develop, test, and quality-check all production touring cars on the company's own 2.3-mile test track.

Factory facilities cover a total area of 292,000 sq. ft. Recently a 10,000 sq. ft. extension was completed to the main assembly shop, and a 45,000 sq. ft. new body manufacturing facility is virtually completed now. Office facilities are based on open-plan design, all administrative operations being contained in a temperature controlled office of some 26,000 sq. ft.

As part of a new engine programme, orders have been placed for delivery in 1971 of a fully numerically controlled machining complex comprising automatic tool changing multi-purpose machines. At the same time, Mr Chapman states, a great deal of thought is being given to improving operational techniques, in the belief that the company's computerized scheduling system will enable the group to achieve higher production and sales volume at much lower stock levels than have existed in the past few months.

Orders this year have been satisfactory, and Mr Chapman believes that the necessary steps have been taken to ensure that 1970 'will produce results consistent with the group's previous growth record'. And that is a matter of efficiency and hard graft, rather than glamour.

Folkes Hefo

THE accountancy profession is strongly represented at the key points in John Folkes Hefo Ltd with Mr J. W. Hearnshaw, F.C.A., as chairman, Mr Barry R. Brazier, F.C.A., chief accountant, and Mr D. J. Newey, F.A.C.C.A., secretary. With that array one would expect detailed but explicit presentation of figures despite the complications involved in a group with three divisions, 11 'units' and 'profit centres', and 30 or so different products ranging from swimming pools and houses to overhead cranes and nuts and bolts.

And, mirabile dictu, detailed but explicit presentation is just what shareholders in the company get – even to that essential item in all take-over-conscious companies, the differentiation between old and new earnings. The profit, at £1,329,000, was in line with the board's expectations and 'of the increase of £269,000 (25.3 per cent), £134,000 (12.6 per cent) arose from internal growth and £135,000 (12.7 per cent) from new acquisitions'.

Two separate but related companies, John Folkes and Hefo, were merged in August 1968 'to transform a conglomeration of many companies into a tightly knit management structure of 11 units, grouped in three divisions, containing a limited number of profit centres each considered capable ultimately of earning profits of at least £100,000 a year'.

So John Folkes Hefo is a rationalized conglomerate, or to be more accurate, a conglomerate in the process of rationalization, one particular point being that all companies operate within 20 miles of the group's Stourbridge (Worcs) headquarters.

Arthur Richardson

WITH the accounts of Arthur Richardson & Son Ltd of Nottingham, there is a personal letter from the chairman, Mr Arthur H. Burney, introducing a new board-room team to shareholders. The Richardson organization covers wholesale and cash and carry grocery warehouses mainly in the Midlands, as well as a 14-strong chain of retail shops. The address of the company is Mace House, Wollaton, Nottingham, and Mace retail trading is an 'ever-increasing' proposition of the group's delivered business.

All told, sales for the ten months to January 31st, covered by the latest accounts totalled £11,872,000 for pre-tax profits of £169,764. The purpose of Mr Burney's letter is to announce his retirement from the management team and from the chairmanship of the company from the end of July.

Last December he completed 50 years' service with the company, for the last 23 of which he has been first managing director and then chairman. His successor as chairman is Mr D. L. Smith, F.C.A., who joined the company in 1954, to become financial director in 1965 and vice-chairman in 1968.

'No trade' Mr Burney comments, 'has been more affected by change in the last ten years than food wholesaling and retailing, and at the age of 41 he [Mr Smith] will lead a board with all the enthusiasm and ability necessary to carry the company forward into the future.'

Two executives are to be appointed to the board – Mr Richard Black, who is 29, becomes operations director responsible for the development and supervision of properties and other capital assets, and Mr John Black, who is 27, becomes sales director responsible for the development of Mace trading. The food distribution is clearly a young man's business.

Being Wise

AFTER the event is the time for being wise – but not too long after. There is currently infinite capacity for after-the-event wisdom in the cases of the Guthrie Corporation and Plantation Holdings groups – two organizations basically and substantially concerned with rubber and oil palm estates in Malaysia, but more recently concerned with the building up of UK interests.

And in the contrary way of things, industrial conditions in the UK have turned sour just when conditions in the rubber industry have turned sweet. Plantation Holdings' 1969 accounts show plantation profit and investment income up from £435,412 to £754,179, but light engineering profits down from £70,675 to £26,980 – the light engineering being through Hills (Patents) who make car number-plates and signs for local authorities. This year the vehicle number-plate business of Chas Wright has been bought to reinforce the position. In another non-commodity development, a company called Helmut Securities was revived last year as a finance company.

In the case of Guthrie Group, the non-plantation business is far bigger than in Plantation Holdings. Guthrie own the Lintafoam group, and last year took over the James Templeton carpet organization, which at the time of the take-over was expected to make a profit of over £½ million. This was to have been a major step towards the establishment of a 50-50 earnings split between industrial and plantation profits.

But, alas, while original UK operations made a 1969 profit of £425,000 against £374,000, there was a Templeton attributable loss of £281,000. The Guthrie profit face was saved by a strong advance from £3,098,000 to £4,734,000 in profits on Malaysian operations.

Tate of Leeds

ELEVEN months' turnover at £5,225,832 and a pre-tax loss of £12,481, compared with turnover of £5,879,000 for the previous 12 months for a pre-tax profit of £109,439, are a combination of figures from the Tate of Leeds accounts indicating a troubled trading year. The Tate of Leeds are main Ford dealers for cars and covering sales, spare parts, and service and repairs in Leeds and Wetherby, and they also distribute and same services for JCB excavators and shovels, and Shawnee Poole Dumpers.

The loss shown for the 11 months to the end of 1969 was the first in the company's history 'despite', as the chairman, Mr T. Tate, puts it, 'our having achieved various measures for improving efficiency and reducing expenses'. The main reasons were the heavy reduction in retail sales of new and used motor-cars and losses arising from phasing out the company's agricultural machinery operations.

But there was another factor that influenced the result. Tate of Leeds had to pay a price for progress, and progress in this case was the construction of the Leeds Inner Ring Road which not only debarred traffic from the area, but made it extremely difficult for potential clients to get to the company's main showrooms in New York Road. The road is now open again, Mr Tate reports.

The selling of new and second-hand passenger, and commercial vehicles, plus the appropriate service, spares and repair facilities, added up to a turnover of £4,245,633 and a 'departmental profit' of £82,441. But on a turnover of £980,199 from the 'selling of new and second-hand earth-moving equipment and agricultural tractors, together with the appropriate service, spares, and repair facilities', the profit was £53,324. From the total profit of £135,765, unallocated overheads took £103,513 to give trading profit of £32,252 which had to stand interest payment of £44,733 to produce the pre-tax loss of £12,481.

Profit before SET

THERE is a differentiation, although not necessarily a nice differentiation, in the preliminary figures of Redman Ltd between 'profit before taxation' and 'profit before corporation tax'. The Redman statement opens with 'profit before taxation' £366,169 against £229,494, after including £4,101 (£506) of profit on sale of properties and after charging £2,000 (£4,760) for 'legal fees in connection with mortgage'.

From the 'profit before taxation' there is deducted selective employment tax £61,571 (£44,066) to give 'profit before corporation tax' at £304,598 (£185,428). Redman operates a chain of 82 grocery and provision merchants shops in Lancashire, Yorkshire and the North Midlands and is therefore SET conscious. But surely SET is an operating cost and not a separate charge on profits. It is part and parcel of the wage cost structure.

Redman would not think of stating profits before National Health stamp and graduated pension. Or one presumes they wouldn't. So why state profit before SET?

It may be readily agreed that SET is something that Redman do not like paying and that SET is a bad tax. But is it an item to be shown this way in company reporting?

3 Development expenditure

Development expenditure carried forward relates to expenditure on new models and major variations to existing models which is written off at a specified amount for each car produced, calculated by reference to anticipated production in the three years following the introduction of the new model or major variation. The development expenditure incurred in the period was £159,031 (£91,500) and the amount written off during the period was £160,108 (£120,997).

Existed at 4th January 1970 in respect of:

(i) claims in respect of the Group's freehold property. The Contractors who built the factory have brought a legal action against Hestel Properties Limited (from whom the factory was acquired by the parent company in September 1968) which, together with an action by the architects concerned could involve liability for amounts in excess of £200,000. The parent company has agreed to guarantee the obligations of Hestel Properties Limited under the building contract and, as part of the agreement for the acquisition of the property, has undertaken to Hestel Properties Limited that it will discharge any further amounts which may become due in respect of the above claims.

(ii) a legal action taken against the parent company in 1965 by a former West Coast Distributor in the USA for $1,000,000. No provision has been made in the accounts in respect of this action as the Directors have been advised that they have a valid defence.

(iii) a guarantee by the parent company in respect of discounting facilities under an Export Credits Guarantee Department policy available to a subsidiary company up to a maximum of £150,000.

CITY NOTES

RARELY have investors ever taken such heed of the advice so universally proffered to 'wait and see'. The outburst of optimism that lasted less than one day after the General Election was so strong that warnings against over-optimism were readily and easily given.

Since then the reaction to those warnings has been taken to the extreme of inactivity so that stock-market turnover is down to the rock-bottom level that existed shortly before the election when the polls were still pointing the way that convinced Mr Wilson that a June election would see him home.

Since the election there have also been implied warnings from sources other than investment commentators. The Confederation of British Industry's industrial forecast was one. The fact that Turner & Newall had to pay 10½ per cent for loan stock money and yet still have the stock placed at 98½ per cent was another. Renewed doubts as to the pattern of the American economy was yet another.

Above all is the fear that the economic and industrial situations are deteriorating at a rate that will not allow the new Government the settling-in time that it needs. The initial outburst of optimism therefore has quickly given way to a resumption of fear rather than pessimism.

Nothing drags down stock-markets more than doubt and there is plenty of that about at present.

THE City Panel is trying to adjust its rules so that the matter of profit forecasting in times of take-over and merger is still further tightened. It has to be admitted that the exceeding or even meeting of a take-over-influenced forecast is very much the exception rather than the rule. Time and time again companies successful in take-over bids have to report profit shortcomings on the part of the new subsidiary.

If the bid is successful and shareholders are paid out at an inflated price for their shares few tears, even of crocodile character, are shed. The crunch comes when the profit forecast is successful in defeating the bid and shareholders left in the company carry the consequent can.

But the Panel will have difficulty in framing its rules to prevent the overt kind of forecasting, the implied forecasting that goes on during the take-over infighting and during the 'PR' battle that invariably goes on. If it is too strict the Panel could be accused of favouring take-over attackers rather than defenders.

S O many forecasts of higher insurance premiums – particularly motor premiums – have been made lately that car owners and others might wonder how hard the apparent explosion of premiums is going to hit them. But the forecasts are in fact part of one omnibus forecast made months ago when preliminary 1969 figures became known. Since then the forecasts have been repeated by individual companies and individual institutions. Lloyds have had a go and so, lately, has the British Insurance Association which started it all. For BIA members 1969 was the worst car insurance year ever with a loss of £39.7 million against a mere £9.6 million in 1968.

Mr Basil Robarts, chairman of BIA, underlining the forecasts all over again, recently said it would be 'most surprising if motor rates were not increased this year'. He commented on the 'very real anxiety' caused by the problem of inflation throughout the world.

THE world's first investment combining commodity speculation, gilt-edged 'security', and life assurance has been organized by the Janus Securities unit trust group and Bradford Insurance, with Lewis and Peat looking after the all-important commodity dealing.

The investment takes the form of a minimum £100 single premium bond invested half in Government stocks and half in Janus Futures Fund which will trade through Lewis and Peat in the commodity markets. The initial offer closes on July 31st, and the bonds will be valued monthly.

'The Age of the Dinosaurs'

Professor Stamp's forthright talk to accountancy lecturers

BOTH the English and the Scottish Institutes have a long tail of dinosaurs, who are resisting anything which will make life less comfortable or remunerative for them.' So asserted Professor Edward Stamp, principal speaker at an afternoon seminar following last week's annual general meeting in London of the Association of Lecturers in Accountancy.

Speaking under the title of 'British accountancy - a new look', Professor Stamp admitted at the outset that he had strong feelings but he wished to present himself in the role of a friendly critic. He saw no reason why British accountants should not display the qualities of intellect and character which would establish them as the world leaders of the profession.

He contrasted the British pre-occupation with articulated service with an American proposal which would allow the candidate to be admitted as a Certified Public Accountant on successful completion of a five years' university course in accounting, leading to a master's degree. The ban on the transfer of articles without the principal's consent, he said, protected those firms who were least fitted to offer suitable training, and in Scotland the continued use of the terms 'master' and 'apprentice' indicated an almost feudal relationship; a collateral feature of articulated service was the preponderance of correspondence-course education. The intellectual content of the professional examinations was not high, and more emphasis was attached to practical experience - some of it at a very trivial level - than to accounting theory.

Chairs of accounting

The integration of the Society of Incorporated Accountants with the three Chartered Institutes in 1957 had resulted, the Professor said, in the destruction of the Journal of Accounting Research, and the disappearance of a chair of accounting. There were very few chairs of accounting at present in Great Britain: some were more appropriately designated as chairs of 'finance' or 'financial management', and there seemed to be some doubt whether accounting was academically respectable. This state of affairs, Professor Stamp alleged, was responsible for the loss of several distinguished academics who were now pursuing their studies at universities in America, Australia, South Africa and elsewhere.

In the United Kingdom, the average accountancy practitioner displayed a contempt for book-learning, and the level of accounting research was 'pretty dismal': in fact he doubted whether any research worthy of the name had so far been undertaken. The Scottish attitude appeared to be that recommendations were superfluous, as the training of a chartered accountant should have fitted him to deal with the situations which he might meet in practice; the English recommendations he dismissed as 'pathetic', being prepared simply on an ad hoc basis with no regard to fundamental principles. There was no discernible attempt to construct an integrated accounting theory, and there were a number of important concepts such as 'income', which were nowhere defined.

Emphasis on tax

In comparing the position of accounting practice in America with the United Kingdom, it was sometimes claimed that the transfer of tax work from lawyers to accountants had enhanced the prestige of the British profession. Unfortunately, said the professor, this undue emphasis on tax problems had also, led British accountants to frame their ideas, for instance on stock valuation, in line with Inland Revenue requirements to the exclusion of all else.

He warned his audience that any disturbance of the comfortable world of the 'dinosaurs' would be resented. In this connection he quoted the flippant - or, in his own word, 'contemptible' - replies by the late Sir Bernhard Binder and Sir Alan Rae Smith to Professor W. T. Baxter's article in The Accountant in 1953 on the need for accounting recommendations,¹ and a short extract from a leading article in The Accountant of May 28th last. He concluded his address with the suggestion that integration of the profession would not make much difference to the average accountant, but would bring some desirable new blood into the [English] Institute.

Professor Stamp's address was followed by a panel discussion under the chairmanship of Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A., in which Messrs W. R. Packer, M.A., F.C.A., H. J. F. Harvey, F.A.C.C.A., A.T.I.I., A.M.B.I.M., and J. P. Wilson, F.C.W.A., were invited to comment on several of the points raised.

The importance of articulated service

It was observed from the panel that accountancy was a practical profession, and the emphasis must be on practical training. It was desirable to have one nominated individual, whether under articles or some other form of training contract, as the 'link man', between the professional society and the trainee, and to be responsible for the latter's progress. On the other hand, insistence on one specified avenue of entry should not be allowed to deny an able candidate from qualifying as a useful member of the profession.

The absence of an integrated structure of recommendations

Professor Stamp's 'lambasting' of the profession for failing to define its concepts was unfortunate when so much had already been done on a voluntary basis. Accounting principles were not like the Law of Moses: accountancy was the provision of information, and regard had to be given to the purposes for which that information was required. This, in turn, indicated a need for practical experience of the conditions underlying the supply of information.

Replying, the Professor denied the charge of 'lambasting', but he refused to accept the voluntary basis as an excuse for the slow progress of accounting research: the necessary funds must be provided and spent. The chairman reminded the audience that those firms whose members participated in professional committees and working parties were already accepting a considerable financial sacrifice

Apathy towards the work of academic accountants

The purpose of a book was to communicate, so that from this standpoint a book which was not understood was a bad book. To improve standards it was necessary to influence and to convert people rather than to antagonize them: to impute a 'dinosaur' mentality to one's opponents was not necessarily the best approach.

Professor Stamp explained that he had no intention of labelling any one individual as a 'dinosaur'; nevertheless, dinosaurs did exist and he would regard it as a failure of communication not to describe them as such. Their continued influence would be bad for the profession; at present, it was impossible in Britain to expect the average practitioner to understand any book which required a knowledge of mathematics or economics.

If the word 'dinosaurs' was considered offensive, he would submit in its place 'troglodytes'; but it was sometimes necessary to give offence in order to get things done. He claimed, for example, that the 1969 Statement of Intent of the English Institute would not have appeared when it did but for the widespread Press controversy in which he had played a leading part.

Annual general meeting

At the fifth annual general meeting of the Association held earlier in the day, the following officers were elected for 1970-71:

Chairman: Mr E. C. D. Evans, B.Sc.(ECON.), F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M. (Slough College).

Vice-Chairman: Mr C. H. Filder, F.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.T.I.I. (Liverpool Polytechnic).

Secretary: Mr F. A. Griffiths, F.C.A., A.A.C.C.A. (Bournemouth College).

Treasurer: Mr T. C. Maysmor-Gee, F.C.A. (Birmingham College).

Correspondence

The Future of the Accountancy Profession

SIR, - Everything that I have seen and heard since the first Albert Hall meeting of the English Institute in April 1969, increases my belief that the integration scheme will strengthen the standing of accountancy in general.

We have all seen a list of subject headings in the proposed examination syllabus. I wonder how many members there are whose education would have enabled them to pass these new papers. Judging from the replies to this question at one of the preliminary meetings in Manchester the answer is 'hardly any'. This seems an unusual way of lowering standards - particularly as a specific objection to the scheme is that many of the new members will not have passed the old papers.

Since the first Albert Hall meeting several relevant factors have been highlighted by authors and by sources outside the Institute. One of the most fundamental was a query by a Salford lecturer who asked if the age and other limitations on entry were appropriate when inter-disciplinary movement was beginning to take place, particularly in industry?

A profession which limits entry can only be justified, I suggest, if it can add something to a person's worth which a university, say, cannot give on its own. Most of the members will think that our Institute can. The question is, can it do more when joined by the other institutes? Money-wise - by fees and Government grants - yes; educationally - by better co-ordination with universities - yes; by standards of personal behaviour and bringing practical needs to the eyes of the teaching bodies - yes.

There has been a great deal of controversy recently over financial reporting methods but there are more fundamental problems still to be solved in how to run businesses from day to day. Mr Dixon's publicized joint production examples illustrate just one facet of a whole complex of problems. If these are not solved or reduced will financial reporting problems be solved?

Many aspects of management and behavioural sciences which have appeared since the Parker Education Report will have to be taken into account to improve in both areas.

I can appreciate the eloquent plea by a young qualified member at the recent special meeting to maintain his 'rights', having memories of his arduous training period, but I suggest he is committing the same fatal error as the senior 'opposition' leaders in over-estimating the stability of past methods on which previous examination papers have been based. These bases are under attack (justifiably in my personal view) and cannot be treated as rules for the remainder of the young member's life without considerable risk. One of the deficiencies of the correspondence school method of teaching is that its pressure necessitates parrot-fashion learning with no chance to debate the basis of that learning.

As I understand it, one of the primary functions of a university is to teach students how to improve teaching. Whilst we must be careful to leave the back door ajar for the late starting genius, the sooner the bulk of membership comes from graduate entry the better. This should at least quicken the process of change which is so badly needed. As an example, one personnel manager colleague has estimated the current half-life of a B.Sc. to be five years. That is, after 10 years from graduating, a first-class honours degree man is dependent for a living on knowledge acquired solely since he graduated. This approach is just as viable in the financial quarter.

I believe it will be essential, if the scheme is adopted, for non-practising members to help practitioners in financial reporting, because they (the non-practitioners) will have to improve their own methods of control first. Practising members can help non-practitioners by insisting on and maintaining objective and selfless standards of personal behaviour on which the non-practitioner can lean on the many occasions when he, too, has to stand up and be counted. The academic member can help both groups, since his ideas can be openly propagated and he can receive the practical feed-back he needs.

One of the criticisms of the scheme is that introducing members from other institutes will bring in first loyalties to Government and commercial/industrial bodies instead of to the principles upheld (by inference) by all chartered accountants. It was pointed out by a member at the special meeting that the number of chartered accountants in industry is three times that of the entire Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants membership. One cannot help wondering if the claims of moral strength attributed only to chartered accountants are fully justified.

The question members must answer is: Will the above three groups of accountants, i.e., practising, non-practising, and academic, operate better if each has four supporting institutes competing for attention or as one close-knit community strengthened by size, wealth, Government backing, and the strength of the country's educational system, or not? If they think not, they should vote against the scheme.

If accountants are to obtain greater influence they will have to produce a new breed of member – a finance-biased management scientist to whom the present constitution of the Institutes involved in this scheme will be irrelevant.

Members of the Institute who are against the scheme are concerning themselves with personal status whilst the techniques on which they depend for a living are being changed under their noses by outside influences. The financial needs of business are changing rapidly and the means to answer these needs will be found.

How much of those needs will be satisfied by chartered accountants will depend on their own ability to learn new techniques.

It is particularly galling to line accountants in industry to initiate original work which they have to hand to others to implement, simply because they have not had education and training in computer and associated sciences, and then watch their old control function being operated by others. The need for a strong, technically-correct accountancy thread to run through all management information systems is not always appreciated by top management in many companies who currently seem more inclined to go for a change of face in selecting managers for new information systems. Does this mean that there is some justification for the 'fuddy-duddy accountant' allegations or are we short on techniques and, very important, the ability to use words well, which a university training undoubtedly fosters. If these remarks apply to industrial members now, they will undoubtedly apply to practising members before very long.

No man-made measures are ever impregnable, but if members accept that new ideas, techniques and methods are needed, the last simple question is, do they think that the Council's proposals have a better chance of success than those of four separate Institutes?

• I suggest that they would and that we should vote in favour of the resolution to merge.

Yours faithfully,

T. E. HEYWOOD,
F.C.A., J.DIP.M.A.

'Associated' Companies

SIR, – In your issue of June 25th you published the 'exposure draft', released by the Accounting Standards Steering Committee, of the proposed statement on Accounting for the Results of Associated Companies.

One may reasonably ask two fundamental questions:

- (1) Even if one accepts that shareholders are entitled to more information about the effects of their company's investment in an 'associated' company, what practical meaning can there be in a consolidation that includes profits, the distribution of which could not be compelled by the 'investing' company and includes assets which it is not able to control?
- (2) What of the poor auditor and his indemnity policy premiums? I would draw attention to your issue dated February 5th, 1970, where in a leading article 'Those Other Auditors', you reviewed the statement entitled Using the Work and Report of Another Auditor, issued by the Accountants International Study Group. If one considers the procedures and methods recommended by the Study Group for evaluating the work of another auditor and then considers their application to 'associated' companies, one can imagine few circumstances in which the auditors of the 'investing' company will report without reservation if the 'exposure draft' becomes effective.

Yours faithfully,

FCA.

'Incomplete Records' Problem

SIR, – Are certain of the 'big three' banks deliberately trying to shake off their smaller clients?

I ask this question because of the new practice of sending bank statements without the returned cheques. This has been an insurmountable difficulty in dealing with otherwise run-of-the-mill incomplete record cases.

In spite of the helpfulness implied in their publicity, it is proving a most difficult task to get the used cheques back. I therefore propose to circularize my clients and their banks with a notice pointing out:

- (1) that under the Cheques Act in many cases the used cheque is the client's only record of payment;
- (2) the client owns the cheques anyway, therefore the client is entitled to insist on receiving back all his used cheques.

Should this prove abortive, I shall recommend that those of my clients who only use the bank as a checking account change over to the Post Office Giro. However, before taking action I would appreciate hearing the opinion of my professional colleagues.

Yours faithfully,

DAVID GORDON.

Ilford, Essex.

STUDENT ROUNDBOUT

London Students' President's Meeting

SIR ALEC DOUGLAS-HOME, Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, was the guest speaker at the annual President's Meeting of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London held last Thursday at Chartered Accountants' Hall. The President of the Society, Mr G. R. Appleyard, F.C.A., presided and among those present were Mr A. H. Walton, M.A., F.C.A., Deputy President of the Institute; Mr D. S. Morpeth, T.D., B.COM., F.C.A., Vice-President; Mr C. Evan-Jones, M.B.E., Secretary of the Institute; Mr Stuart McDonald, M.A., A.C.A., Chairman of the Committee of the Society, and President of the Association of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies, and Mr Anthony Cross, B.A., Chairman of the National Executive Committee of ACASS.

In the course of his address Sir Alec said:

'You are aspiring to be members of a most disciplined and exacting profession, and I wish good fortune to those of you who have been waiting for the results of the examinations. Accountancy is a profession – which means that the individual has to apply himself over many years and to attain standards which can only be described as exacting. I hope that all of you, in due course, after the right number of years, reach the top of your profession.'

Moral standards

'I was anxious to come to this meeting because as students you are naturally concerned in the future of the nation and international society; and I was anxious to come, too, because this profession of yours boasts those standards which are essential to a better tomorrow – I wonder where I learned that phrase? – the standards which contribute to and indeed underpin the responsible society. I will give you examples of what I mean – the honouring of commitments, trust, and honest and fair dealing. Too many of these qualities are at present, both in our own country and in other countries, in short supply.'

'You have a reputation for mathematical accuracy, and I can suggest one or two organizations which might profit from your advice, but I am not going to have one word said against the opinion polls. (Laughter.) But for them the election would never have been called at all.'

'Your profession is particularly intimately concerned with the fortunes of industry, and our common ambition in this country is to see it expand and grow and make profits. I would like to re-introduce that word into polite society, because it is the profitable business that is the asset to the country, and when we are thinking in terms of expanding industry, rates of growth and all the rest of it, there are different interpretations put upon the role of Government in that essential national purpose.'

'Basically, and I can only talk of our own Conservative philosophy and way of thinking, it is this. We identify the inspiration and the dynamic of society as residing in the individual and not in Government. In other words, we believe it is the individual who creates wealth, not the official, not the Government; and if that is a valid analysis, that it is out of this hive of competitive activity – competition between people with an infinite variety of personality, talents, and skills – that the power and progress of the community grows in proportion and the Government should create a framework in which those talents can be exploited.'

'There is no one individual in this hall who is like his neighbour. Each one is endowed with a different personality and character and talents, and it is in the friction, if you like, of the interplay of these talents that the dynamic of a country grows and progress is assured. And so, in our view, a Government's task is to create an economic and fiscal climate in which this inventive genius and this infinite variety of skills can in very simple – and the late Sir Winston's – words, and Sir Winston never used words unless they had a meaning, be "set free".

Sir Alec Douglas-Home emphasizes a point in the course of his address to the London Students' Society.

'This is, therefore, our assessment of what a Government should do, and I hope that as a Government we will be able to live up to our philosophy, that we will succeed in stimulating the creation of wealth, but having done that, always be conscious of the other side of a Government's duty, which is to use the taxation instrument with discretion, but with the purpose of creating a responsible and a just society. And therefore we put the emphasis on the creation of wealth; unless it is created it cannot be distributed – but we accept, of course, that both functions are functions of responsible Government.

UN anniversary

'Now I have been billed to talk to you about Britain's role in the world and the role of the student in it. But for obvious reasons I cannot do that – I must, first of all, report to Parliament. But it is a coincidence that this meeting falls at a time when we are celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, which was founded by its authors as one of the great hopes for mankind – and still is. There have been, of course, many slips in the last 25 years, and the authors' hopes have been disappointed, and the hopes of a great many who put their faith in the United Nations as a peace-keeping organization; but nevertheless it still remains, I would think, the chief guarantee that the world will not slip into another and still more disastrous war.

'But peace and order depend absolutely on the standards which I earlier attached to your own profession, particularly honouring commitments and the respect for the rights of one's neighbour, and it cannot be repeated too often in the context of international affairs that there is no other basis for a peaceful and orderly world and for civilized living. World peace must be established on the foundation of the sanctity of treaties and the rules of the United Nations Charter as they affect the relationships between nations.

'If these are the tests for a peaceful and an orderly world society in which ordinary people can go about their lawful occasions without fear and insecurity, then in the last 25 years we have fallen down very badly on the job by any standard.

'I do not think we can unduly blame ourselves in the free world. The fact that following the Second World War the Communist powers would not co-operate in establishing this world peace-keeping authority, and give it the means to assert its will, is the basic reason why so far it has failed to create the conditions where individuals and nations can go about their business in security.

'It is why in so many parts of the world, for example, in Eastern Europe, for example, in the Middle East, for example, in Vietnam, we still have tensions and cannot avoid even at this time in the twentieth century using the word "war". •

'Are there any signs which we can recognize that an attempt is seriously being made to create some form of constructive co-existence? I think there are some, although the cloud which will perhaps, we hope, in your generation bring relief is still the size of a man's hand. But Europe has consciously buried her rivalries. The most significant event in the post-war world has been the rapprochement between Germany and France and the possibility of building upon that is the reason why the politics of European unity weigh so largely in the scale along with any economic advantages.

In harmony

'If on the Continent from which the most devastating world wars have sprung it is possible to build a community which is in harmony politically and which frames its foreign policy accordingly towards the rest of the world as a good neighbour – quite apart from any economic gain which might come to Britain from the Common Market – that would be, of course, an immense prize in terms of human wellbeing.

'Is it possible to mark an easing of the acute tensions which we knew after the war and which were given the label of the "Cold War?" There is no country in the world that can be said to have the necessary confidence to lower its guard. Quite obviously the dangers are great, particularly when one part of the world still apparently believes that it is legitimate to use force to back political policies. But although there is not yet sufficient confidence for anyone, for example, in Europe, to let down their guard, nevertheless, certain hesitant contacts are being made, and perhaps they are just the beginnings of a recognition that the time has come when war must be outlawed if man is to survive.

"These are some of the problems which face us both at home and abroad, problems with which you inevitably will be increasingly involved. If I have to give any message today, I think it would be the one with which I began – one must be selective in stating principles of conduct. There was an examination paper set in one of our universities only a short while ago on the Ten Commandments, with a little note at the bottom saying, "Only four of these should be attempted". (Laughter.) Well, I do not know which your four would be – I had better not ask you, and I am not sure which mine would be – but nevertheless, if I had to name the principle on which one should proceed in these very difficult problems which face each individual in life, I think one cannot do better than name those with which I started: that is the honouring of commitments – the basis of trust – and honest and fair dealing, and it is because those are so outstandingly characteristic of the profession which all of you students hope to adorn, that I am happy to be here because I think that on these rules of conduct our chances of civilized living depend."

THE WEST OF ENGLAND SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

New President

Mr R. H. Passmore, F.C.A., was elected President of the West of England Society of Chartered Accountants for 1970-71 at the Society's recent annual meeting.

Articled in 1934, he was admitted a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1939, and immediately enlisted in the Territorial Army Regiment, Royal Artillery. On demobilization in 1946, after war service which included five years in various overseas stations, he joined Bishop, Fleming & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Torquay, Exeter, and Paignton, of which firm he is now the senior partner.

Mr Passmore was one of the first members of The Exeter and District Society of Chartered Accountants, and he became its Chairman in 1959. During his service on various sub-committees he assisted in starting a series of residential courses for articled clerks in the area, and took part in lecture meetings. On several occasions he has been President of the Exeter and District Students' Society.

A member of the West of England Society's Committee for over 10 years, his other interests include directorships in a number of local companies, the treasurership of Cockington Parish Church, and membership of the Finance Committee of the Diocese of Exeter. He is also President and Benevolent Officer of the Torquay Branch of the Royal Artillery Association.

He lives with his family in one of the original old-world houses of Torquay.

Other officers of the West of England Society elected for 1970-71 are:

Vice-President: Mr R. C. Bassett, F.C.A.
Secretary: Mr D. P. L. Howe, A.C.A.,
Cooper Brothers & Co, Nelson House,
Rupert Street, Bristol BS1 2QA.
Treasurer: Mr J. D. W. Marle, F.C.A.

At the annual meeting, officers of all the branch societies were elected, and

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

New President

Mr K. H. Glossop, F.C.A., a partner in Hawson, Wing & Hubert Smith, Chartered Accountants, of Sheffield, was elected President of the Sheffield and District Society of Chartered Accountants at the recent eighty-eighth annual meeting of the Society.

Born in 1920, Mr Glossop was educated at the Sheffield and Oakham School, Rutland, and was articled in the firm of W. G. Hawson & Co (now Hawson, Wing & Hubert Smith). His studies were interrupted by the war during which he served with the Royal Artillery, mainly in India and South East Asia, being demobilized in 1946 with the rank of Captain. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1949, and became a partner in his present firm four years later.

Always an active member of the District Society, he has served on the Committee since 1956, including a term of three years as dinner secretary and thereafter as a member of the dinner subcommittee until 1968.

Married, with four children, Mr Glossop is a deputy warden of St John's Church, Ranmoor, Sheffield, and in 1966 was appointed a voluntary after-care worker with the Sheffield Probation and After-Care Service.

Other officers elected for the ensuing year are:

Vice-President: Mr P. W. Allott, B.A.(ECON.), A.C.A.

Secretary: Mr D. B. Shaw, F.C.A., 22 Norfolk Row, Sheffield S1 2PA.

Treasurer: Mr J. E. S. Dunn, A.C.A.

Auditor: Mr J. Rowan, F.C.A.

At the annual meeting, the District Society presented a silver rose bowl to the President of the Institute, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., for use in the recently opened headquarters of the Institute.

SOUTH EASTERN SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

'The acquisition, disposal, or merger of unquoted companies or businesses' is, in the opinion of the South Eastern Society of Chartered Accountants, a subject of such vital importance to many accountants - in practice or commerce - that it has been chosen as the theme of a three-day residential conference at the University of Surrey, Guildford, from September 24th to 26th.

Factors influencing the parties to an acquisition or merger will be explained by Mr W. G. Underwood, A.C.A., a merchant banker, and Mr R. F. Sumner, F.C.A., of Cooper Brothers, will deal with the investigation into the affairs of a business proposed for takeover. Taxation implications of mergers are to be covered by Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A., and some possible solutions of practical problems from transactions will be suggested by a senior member of Thomas Tilling Ltd.

Ample time will be allocated for discussion in small groups followed by question sessions with the speakers.

Further details may be obtained from Mr R. H. Buxton, F.C.A., Conference Secretary, SESCA, 15 Wrotham Road, Gravesend, Kent.

THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNAL AUDITORS

The twenty-second annual general meeting of the London Chapter of The Institute of Internal Auditors was held on June 24th, when Mr Frank J. Rigg, F.C.A., was installed as the new President.

Educated at Cotham Grammar School, Mr Rigg was articled to Mr J. Burgess-Parker, F.C.A., in Bristol, and was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1951. From 1952 to 1965 he was with The American Express Co Inc. in internal audit and as chief accountant in Paris. Since October 1965 he has been group internal auditor, Taylor Woodrow Services Ltd, and he was recently appointed a director of the company's French associate, Gretima S.A.

It was announced at the meeting that Mr H. A. Whittaker, M.A., F.C.I.S., had been elected to the position of Regional Vice-President of the European West Region for the year 1970-71 at the Institute's annual meeting in Atlanta, Georgia, on June 14th.

At an informal dinner which followed the annual general meeting, to which members' wives were invited, a presentation was made by Mr N. A. Smith, M.B.E., T.D., F.C.A., Director-at-Large, to Mr J. O. Davies, F.C.A., former chief internal auditor of the National Coal Board, on the occasion of his retirement. Mr Davies has held office as President (twice), Regional Vice-President, Regional Director and Director-at-Large.

His services to the Institute were recognized at the International Conference in Atlanta last month by the Bradford Cadmus Memorial Award. This Award was also made to Mr Heinz Hintze, another London Chapter member, in recognition of his services to internal auditing in Scandinavia and Paris, and as an author.

If you suddenly need a merchant bank you probably needed one before.

The fact that a business needs specialised financial advice in a hurry often means that the situation need never have developed to crisis point at all if a merchant bank had been consulted earlier.

A merchant bank with the breadth of services that Kleinwort Benson provides can help a company take in its stride such situations as the raising of capital, the need to react quickly to a take-over bid or the 'now-or-never' development of a business opportunity.

It also has a very sensitive eye for the ripples on the surface of international events which can often rock the boat nearer home.

Nor is it just large companies that need this service. A merchant bank is fundamentally concerned with business growth and development. Any company that thinks it's too small for a merchant bank is likely to remain so.

We'd like to spread our services before you. To discuss what we do in a calm and leisurely atmosphere. And show you the ways in which we as onlookers sometimes see more of the game than you do.

We'll talk about any aspect of business or finance. If necessary we'll even cope with emergencies.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS FOR GERMANY

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., have vacancies in their German offices for qualified staff. Preference given to applicants having about two years' post-qualification experience but more recently qualified men will also be considered.

We are looking for men with drive, enthusiasm and ambition to work on audits of German subsidiaries of major U.K. and U.S. companies and on pre-acquisition investigations. Valuable experience provided in the most modern auditing techniques and in U.S. and Continental European accounting principles. Excellent promotion prospects.

Although no initial knowledge of German is required since language training will be provided in Germany at our expense, competence in this language would be an added advantage and would be remunerated accordingly. Professional staff training courses at various levels also provided.

Initial salaries will be in the range of £2,950 p.a. (for newly-qualified men) to over £4,000 p.a. with placing according to prior experience. Salaries are reviewed annually. Up to four weeks' vacation and twelve public holidays in year. Successful applicants will be expected to sign a three-year contract. Interviews will be arranged in the U.K. with a Partner from the German Offices.

Applications to the Staff Partner,
11 Ironmonger Lane, London, E.C.2.

The Hague, where being a Chartered Accountant is 'gezellig'

Working in Europe means two main advantages for you—the opportunity to increase your professional knowledge in an internationally orientated business community, and the experience of a different way of life in a foreign country.

The Hague is a particularly fine place from both these points of view. It's a beautiful city—mediaeval and modern—near to the major centres of Dutch and European commerce. And it's "gezellig", an untranslatable Dutch word which combines in one idea all the English expressions like "pleasurable", "comfortable", "companionable".

Living in The Hague can be delightful, or if you prefer somewhere bigger and busier, you could stay in Amsterdam near by.

You'll find working in the Netherlands a valuable challenge. On audits of European subsidiaries of American and British companies, and on stimulating investigation work, you will be encountering fresh problems in fresh circumstances—experience which will give invaluable, positive impetus to career progression.

Benefits include language tuition—although a knowledge of Dutch is not initially necessary for your work—professional development courses, four weeks' holiday each year plus public holidays, and an annual bonus.

Write to C. J. Daintree, at 47 Avenue de l'Opera, 75 Paris 2. He will tell you more about Price Waterhouse & Co., you, and Europe.

Young accountants couldn't be appreciated more, in Australia

Australia is a fortunate country. It has the natural wealth of a new continent, the potential of vast space, and all the experience of Europe and America to draw on.

In this unusual combination of circumstances, the professions are given new impetus - resulting in a more than favourable atmosphere for the young qualified man with extra ambition for rapid advancement.

We need such men in many of the main commercial centres - Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane and Perth. We offer you an attractive starting salary, wide variety of work, and excellent opportunities to enlarge your knowledge of accountancy and management, through specialist training as well as experience.

Providing you take full advantage of the opportunities presented, Australia will be most appreciative!

Please write for an appointment with one of our Australian partners who will be here during July and August. Price Waterhouse & Co., 3 Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London EC2.

STATISTICS FOR ACCOUNTANTS

BY R. B. BROCKINGTON, B.Com., A.C.A.

WHY SHOULD AN ACCOUNTANT NEED STATISTICS?

The easy answer to this is that he will need to pass his examinations. All the major accountancy bodies now include statistics in their examination syllabuses. The student, be he working for the examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants or The Institute of Company Accountants will need a certain degree of statistical knowledge.

The more difficult answer is that he will need it in his work as an accountant. The fact that these professional bodies include it in their syllabuses indicates that they believe so and this is emphasized by the syllabus for the newly introduced JOINT DIPLOMA IN MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTING SERVICES where the study of statistics is required to an even more advanced level. From being merely a recording function accountancy has become a live information function. A major part of all information used and required by senior management is, and must be, supplied by the accountant.

EXPERT ADVICE - SIMULTANEOUS INTERVIEWS - YOUR CAREER FURTHERED

Let's call him...

Peter. He joined us last year having just qualified after four years articles with another firm. Since then he has been exposed to a wide variety of audit experience using modern techniques which he has assimilated by participating in advance training courses which have also instructed him in E.D.P. and systems analysis work amongst other things.

Peter has ability, determination and personality and he received initial promotion a few months after joining. He has the opportunity of transferring overseas and he can, of course, specialise if he wants to go more deeply into any particular activity of his choice. His development is planned and like any man of his ability his prospects of advancement to manager and partner status within a comparatively short period are excellent.

Peter has no regrets.

Why don't you call...

YOUNG CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

(Qualified or Finalists)

Arthur Andersen was a prominent figure in updating accounting thought and service. As a result, the organization that bears his name has expanded rapidly and now enjoys a world-wide reputation for progressive leadership and employee training.

Its London office now needs young and ambitious businessmen (in their early 20's) to join their Audit and Taxation divisions.

Training: A second to none internal programme. This year, the introductory three-week course is being held near Paris.

Prospects: You'll have early responsibility and should reach manager status after 3 years, when you'll be earning at least £3,750. Another 8 years and you may be offered a partnership—a large number of the partners are in their thirties.

Interested? Then write now to the firm for more detailed information, for the attention of: David Steele, St. Alphage House, 2, Fore Street, London, E.C.2.

Young Accountants

Thomson McIntock & Co. have vacancies for qualified accountants (and finalists with a successful examination record to date). Initially the work will be mainly auditing of a wide variety of public and private companies. There are early opportunities for experience of computers and of investigation work.

The work is demanding but is matched by above average remuneration and carefully planned training, which although geared primarily to the requirements of the man planning to remain in a practising firm, will prove valuable to the accountant moving into industry. For those interested in travelling there are opportunities overseas in our international firm after an initial period in the U.K. In the longer term the prospects for the able man to win promotion are outstanding in a rapidly expanding firm.

Write, giving brief career details, to:—

M. G. Adamson,
33 King William Street,
London, E.C.4.

Apart from London there are vacancies at present in our offices in Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and Sunderland. Interviews will be arranged at the office concerned.

I Was Newly Qualified Once

When I completed my Articles I wanted advice on what I should do next and what salary I was worth.

I went to all sorts of advisers. Each advised differently and I was even more confused, so I decided to meet as many firms as possible and four agencies arranged over 12 interviews for me.

Before each interview I asked the agents to tell me about each firm. Apart from the address (and one got that wrong) they knew very little.

Still I did the round and I was offered 11 jobs. Good — not really. Only 2 firms were suitable for me and the other 10 interviews were a waste of everybody's time.

You can use this indiscriminate method or you can seek our advice — we personally vet each appointment, thus ensuring that only pertinent introductions are arranged.

GEE'S SUPERVISORY MANAGEMENT STUDIES

GENERAL EDITOR: C. S. DEVERELL, M.A., B.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Industrial Relations and Communications

by William Walsh, A.C.I.S.

GEE'S SUPERVISORY MANAGEMENT STUDIES offer a direct and informative account of supervisory duties, each volume in the series covering a recognized branch of those duties. There are over twenty-five million gainfully occupied men and women in Great Britain – the jobs of the managers and supervisors among them nearly all contain some element of supervision and it is now being more widely admitted that we can do with much more attention to the practice of supervision than we have so far had.

Mr Walsh's Industrial Relations and Communications is the opening volume of the series. It makes an excellent starting-point. The need to communicate is universal and millions of workers and management are involved in industrial relations.

The book is divided into two parts. The first is a practical account of industrial relations in industry today, seen through the eyes of middle management and supervision. The second surveys the problems of communication in an informal way.

Supervisors who are engaged on a National Examinations Board for Supervisory Studies course at a College, or are undergoing in-plant training, or wish to improve their own performance by some personal reading will find that this is the direct reading they need.

The author has gone out of his way to make the treatment of his subject-matter attractive and readable – behind him he has the personal experience of the situations he introduces which makes a commentary convincing. The result is a book which will interest as well as inform.

GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

Management of Change The Role of Information

by John R. M. Simmons, M.A., F.I.O.M.

THE BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT is changing more rapidly than ever, and new techniques for providing information are being developed more rapidly than ever. The information expert should not be left to decide what information the manager of change is to be given. The manager must decide. He must, therefore, ensure that he is competent to decide.

This book is the result of research carried out on this theme for The Institute of Office Management. The premises were:

That business management should be directed towards improving the long-term profitability of the business and

That this can only be achieved by the managers planning projects for novel change which may require information not already available to the business.

The method of research was to propound a hypothetical analysis of the information needed for the management of such projects, to represent the analysis by a check list of questions on the information needed and then to experiment by discussing with business managers how projects are actually conducted in progressive businesses and, in this way, to compare hypothesis with reality.

Because the study is concerned with information for management, it has had to be concerned with management itself, that is, management of change, as distinct from management of the business in being, with which the literature is more accustomed to deal. The study addresses itself to the need for change, even in businesses operating successfully in expanding markets; to the type of organization needed successfully to promote novel changes in the business; and to the need for systematic information for the successful management of change.

Once the information that is needed has been determined, there still remains the problem of obtaining it. This is seen to be a problem of communication, not of making 'communication to' other people, on which attention has hitherto been concentrated, but of getting 'communication from' other people. The book discusses this neglected aspect of communication and draws attention to the need for further study of the subject.

Although the research has been sponsored by The Institute of Office Management, it is dedicated not only to office management but to any business manager who is anxious to change and to enhance the future value of his business. Indeed, the principles which have been evoked are capable of being applied more widely than to commercial and industrial undertakings alone. Wherever costs should be related to benefits produced, we have the essential business situation.

If only they knew about us...

there are about 5,000 companies we could help go public.

Among your clients there is at least one company with the growth potential, the will and the management to go public within the next five years. It will have been running for more than three years and will be currently making profits of at least £25,000 before tax. But it needs capital to realise its full potential – and that is where Midland Montagu comes in.

The essence of our operation is capital – capital for expansion. So that your client can build up profits to the level appropriate for a public flotation.

The advantages of dealing with us.

Your client will have a financial partner with interests identical to his own. A partner who together with his associates can save him (and you) time and effort by helping transact all his financial business and in particular can arrange for the all-important sponsorship of his eventual flotation.

Our capital package will be tailored to his needs – he won't be burdened with loans for longer than necessary nor will he be persuaded to give up a bigger equity stake than he need. And although we won't interfere in the management or with your client's existing relationships with his professional advisers, both you and he will find our directors and executives have a breadth of management experience beyond the confines of the City and finance.

How we work.

An initial approach by client or professional adviser leads to a meeting. Following this – if both parties agree to go ahead – we take a detailed look at the company. Assuming we like what we see – and more importantly your client and you like what you see of us – we will make an offer of finance. If this is acceptable the only formalities remaining are a satisfactory Accountant's Report and a formal agreement settled by Solicitors.

We usually take around a 20 per cent. share in the equity – directly in shares or by way of a loan convertible into shares sometime before flotation – whichever is more appropriate to your client's requirements. Alongside this equity participation we normally provide the balance of the capital by a three to five year medium term loan.

Are you learning all you could from them?

Buried somewhere in your ledgers are the answers to almost any accounting problem.

All you have to do is root them out.

Obviously, a computer will help you some of the way. But unless it's linked with the right system, you could be starved of half the information you need.

At Hoskyns, we starve you of nothing.

Our Standard Ledger Systems analyse facts until there's nothing left to analyse. They sift out more management information than you've ever had before.

Without, at the same time, committing you to unwanted facts.

You can work out your own reporting, with as much detail as necessary. And the number of Systems you require.

We have three:

A Sales Ledger, a Purchase Ledger and a Nominal Ledger. Each one giving you complete management control.

Above all, control on your credit and cash flow.

Even if you don't have a computer we can still help. By running things for you at any of our Data Centres.

Not only that, we're ready when you are to convert our Systems to decimalization.

We can't list all their advantages here. But you'll get a complete run-down by writing to Frank Stephenson, Managing Director, Hoskyns Systems Management Ltd., 16 Hatton Garden, London, E.C.1.

Tax System Under Review

CONTROL of the public purse is the prerogative of Parliament. The fact of the matter is, however, that Parliament has neither the time nor — with few exceptions — the expertise to examine adequately either spending or revenue raising procedures. With the rapid growth of public sector expenditure in recent times, so the capacity of Parliament to control that expenditure has diminished; at the same time, it has posed increasing problems for revenue raising. The passage of the 1965 Finance Act, and more recently the introduction of the selective employment tax, has made increasingly clear the need to review the tax system.

The second Special Report from the Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1969–70 (HMSO, 18s) provides an interesting review of both problems and possibilities in this controversial area. Among the several memoranda of evidence reproduced is one from the allied accountancy bodies which reiterates the point already made in representations to successive Chancellors of the Exchequer, that 'the taxation code no longer provided an equitable and cohesive structure, that it bore all the marks of an approach which was hasty and piecemeal, that it was cumbersome and expensive to administer and that it was overripe for comprehensive review'.

Similar sentiments were expressed by the Institute of Taxation, which observed that the Finance Bill procedure which demanded that the 'whole should be debated and considered in committee in conditions of extreme political tension and great urgency, is not likely to lead to effective comprehensible and comprehensive tax laws considered from the technical standpoint'. This body recommended that a period of at least two months and possibly more should be allowed to elapse after a Bill had been presented, and before the Second Reading debate, to facilitate public discussion and enable informed submissions to be made to Parliament. The allied accountancy bodies also want adequate opportunity for considering the possible impact and implications of fiscal legislation.

Professor Wheatcroft referred to the absence in Britain of any well-equipped research centre for taxation problems. There was nothing comparable with bodies such as the Brookings Institution and the Tax Institute in the United States, or the Canadian Tax Foundation. The traditional English practice, he observed, of treating taxation changes as an annual matter means that short-term considerations are always given priority and the lack of consultation owing to pressures of time results inevitably in an impossible task being imposed upon the Parliamentary draftsmen. This view was also emphasized in a memorandum of the Statute Law Society formed in May 1968.

Other memoranda submitted to the Select Committee stressed the desirability of a wider review of the economic basis of fiscal policy. Messrs Samuel Britton and Peter Jay jointly argued the case for a Parliamentary select committee on economic affairs which would take written and oral evidence from those qualified to give it, as well as from Ministers and Government servants. It would also undertake research. Similar views were expressed by Mr J. H. Robertson, Director of the Inter-Bank Research Organization, who wanted an alternative source of expertise on possible future developments in the tax structure outside the Treasury, upon which MPs and the public could rely for information, analysis, and guidance.

The Rt Hon. John Boyd-Carpenter, M.P., with wide Ministerial experience, recognized in evidence that, theoretically, there was undoubtedly a case for a committee to look at proposals for new forms of taxation in advance of their consideration by the Government, but he was 'very doubtful as to the practical value of this'. Reasons for his reservations lay in the probable impact upon stock exchange values and the possibilities of avoidance if such matters were discussed. Also, he noted, many of the issues tended to be political rather than academic in their implications. Parliamentary select committees were, in general, less effective on such occasions.

A former Treasury Minister, Mr Niall MacDermot, Q.C., was also somewhat sceptical of such proposals for widening the channels of discussion, since he felt that specific tax proposals could be effectively debated in Standing Committee. He did, however, recognize that there was a lack of adequate machinery in Parliament to review the working of the tax system and he was also concerned with the dangers of imposing upon the Revenue departments excessive demands upon their time and resources.

It is gratifying that these matters of professional, and, indeed, public interest are being thoroughly examined within Government circles and it is to be hoped that some benefits will in due course emerge from them.

New Policies for Old?

THE deplorable lack of UK economic growth and the failure of industrial investment to expand, demand immediate attention; the emphasis laid upon economic issues in the Queen's Speech, therefore, is greatly to be welcomed. Without renewed growth there can be no foundation for the new Government's promises to cut taxation or to improve living standards, while increased industrial investment is the sine qua non of any such growth.

Directly related to these issues is the Government's intention to reform industrial relations. Without an effective policy in this sphere, it will be impossible to contain the inevitable wage inflation in the event of a phase of expansion within the economy.

Time alone will tell just what the new administration means by 'reforming and reducing the burden of taxation, providing new incentives to saving and liberating industry from unnecessary intervention by Government'. There is no doubt that the Government will have to pay close attention to spending in the public sector, but given the existing commitments as set out in the recent White Paper on Public Expenditure, it would be naïve to believe that significant cuts are practicable in the short run.

In the longer run significant changes in policy – particularly relating to the finances of the welfare services which absorb half the public expenditure total – may prove possible. It must be in this area more than any other, that any prospects of substantial cuts must lie; though, of course, this is the most politically sensitive area for the new Government.

As far as tax reform is concerned, the Government will certainly try to fulfil its election promise relating to the selective employment tax. If it should be that this can be reduced and ultimately eliminated, the likelihood of a value added tax in the not too distant future is greatly strengthened. Any reduction in direct taxation – in particular income tax – will have to be offset by corresponding increases in, or a broadening of, the basis of outlay taxes.

Predictably, a review of company law is also promised. Last November, Sir Keith Joseph indicated the Conservative Party view that changes were needed in the law relating to accountancy procedures and also to disclosure. Despite the absence of detail in the Queen's Speech, it is certain that the Government will pay particular attention, in this era of wider share-ownership to ensuring better and more information for shareholders and, in this field, the accountancy profession has much to contribute. On the other hand, small companies can be reasonably hopeful that the requirements relating to disclosure will be eased in their favour.

No one will be surprised at the prospective disappearance of the Land Commission. Throughout its short life it has attracted strong criticism, not least for the shortfall in the yield of the betterment levy as well as its related failure to bring more land under its control. The abolition of the Commission does not mean, however, that the problem of increasing the supply of building land will thereby be solved.

One area in which the Government may find itself compelled to follow its predecessors' policies is in the field of regional economic policy. In this area policy must await the re-structuring of the various Government departments, but while it may be possible to re-allocate some of the funds which the Labour Government poured into these areas, it will not be easy – not least for political reasons – to make significant savings. In fact, it is in this area in particular that there is bound to be some conflict between the Government's desire to 'liberate industry from unnecessary intervention' and the hard facts of economic life. Clearly everything will depend on the definition of 'unnecessary'.

If any lesson is likely to be learned from the course of events during the next 18 months, it is the extent to which the hands of modern governments are substantially tied by the policies of their predecessors. No one need expect an economic revolution overnight.

Synopsis of the 1970 Finance Act

THE Accountant Synopsis of the Finance Act 1970, included as a supplement with this issue, outlines the new legislation enacted on May 29th affecting direct and indirect taxes.

The synopsis indicates the contents of each subsection in the body of the Act and of each paragraph in the Schedules, with further details where appropriate. It is designed for easy reference as an extended index to the Act, and can be conveniently folded to insert in the reader's copy of the Act itself.

Chartered Accountants at Christ Church

THE annual summer courses of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, inaugurated in 1947 originally as refresher courses for members returning from war service, now hold an established place in the professional calendar. Nearly 200 members of the Institute will assemble tomorrow (Friday) at Christ Church, Oxford.

On the first evening Lord Justice Buckley, recently appointed to the Court of Appeal after serving as President of the Restrictive Practices Court, will give an informal address on 'The position of the shareholder'. Other addresses are to be presented during the course by Mr K. J. Sharp, T.D., M.A., F.C.A. (a member of the Institute's Council), on 'Smaller audits – bigger problems?'; by Mr C. I. Ball, F.C.A., on 'What does the merchant banker expect from the accountant?'; and by Mr T. A. Kennedy, B.A., on 'Value added tax'.

We understand that the Rt Hon. John Diamond, P.C., F.C.A., who was to have addressed the course on 'The determination of public expenditure', is indisposed as the result of an accident, and will not now be able to attend.

In deference to other calls on members' time, the duration of this year's Oxford course has been curtailed from five to four days. This has inevitably meant some reorganization of the social programme, although the traditional golf competition is still included.

Damages for Auditors

ALONDON firm of chartered accountants is to be paid damages for a 'shocking' allegation about them in a letter written during the battle for control of the Equitable Industrial Company of Scotland Ltd.

Mr Justice Thesiger was told this in the High Court on Monday when counsel announced terms for disposing of a libel action brought by the accountants, Miller Smith & Co, of Weymouth Street, Westminster, against Mr Neil Ross, of Queen Street, Edinburgh, a former director of Equitable Industrial.

Mr Patrick Milmo, for Miller Smith & Co who had been auditors of Equitable Industrial, said considerable controversy arose concerning the company between 1964 and 1966. The London Stock Exchange suspended its share quotation, and there were changes in the board of directors.

A lengthy and complicated battle took place for control of the company, and Mr Ross had been active in campaigns for the reconstitution of the board.

The action was over a letter written by Mr Ross in March 1966 and circulated to prominent and influential persons like the secretary of the share and loan department of the London Stock Exchange, and the senior principal Inspector of Taxes.

'The letter contained the plain suggestion that Miller Smith, in auditing the accounts of Equitable, had connived with the board of directors in respect of certain improprieties allegedly committed by the board', said counsel.

'This was, of course, a shocking allegation to make against a firm of chartered accountants, and one that compelled them to take these proceedings to clear their good name.'

Mr Ross now recognized that there was not a grain of truth in his allegation or any grounds for it. He had agreed to pay Miller Smith appropriate damages and their legal costs.

Mr Stanley Ibbotson, for Mr Ross, said his client regretted that the letter containing the 'utterly untrue' statements was ever written, even though it was written in good faith. He apologized for the embarrassment and distress he had caused. (PA Law Service.)

A Unified Academic Body?

WHILST a great deal has been said and written in recent months about the future of the various professional accountancy bodies, it may possibly come as a surprise to non-academic accountants to learn that at present there are at least three voluntary associations devoted to various aspects of accounting research and teaching. The most active of these, the Association of Lecturers in Accountancy (ALIA), has about 300 members.

Mr M. J. Mephram, B.Sc.(ECON.), F.C.A., A.C.W.A., of Heriot-Watt University, has now drawn attention to this fragmented state of affairs and puts forward proposals for an amalgamation of ALIA with the Association of University Teachers of Accounting (AUTA) and the British Accounting and Finance Association (BAFA). Amongst other considerations, it is argued that the present element of competition between the United Kingdom accountancy bodies in professional education and research will be lost if integration of the profession becomes a fact, and that without 'a strong independent academic organization', accountancy education and research may suffer in consequence.

Membership of both ALIA and AUTA is at present restricted by regard to the applicant's qualifications and occupation. It is suggested that a more liberal policy by the proposed united body would enable accountants not actively engaged in teaching both to contribute to and to gain from its activities.

Mr Mephram's letter is printed in full on another page. A report of ALIA's fifth annual meeting appeared in The Accountant last week.

Cutting Distribution Costs

IT is estimated that the total costs of physical distribution in the United Kingdom are of the order of 20-25 per cent of the gross national product, so that an overall improvement of only 1 per cent in the efficiency with which the many and varied processes of physical distribution are co-ordinated and managed would be measurable in terms of millions of pounds saved to the economy.

The establishment of a Centre for Physical Distribution Management (PDM) by the British Institute of Management is therefore a welcome move in the effort to reduce such distribution costs. Under the chairmanship of Sir Reginald Wilson, B.Com., C.A., chairman of the National Freight Corporation, a board representing industry, universities, government and agencies active in the field of distribution will oversee the affairs of the new Centre. One of the board members is Mr L. S. Payne, F.A.C.C.A., managing director, British Road Services.

The study, control and management of 'total physical distribution' starts, of course, with the movement of raw materials from the source of supply to the production line and ends with the movement of finished products from the end of the production line right through to the consumer. The processes involved include materials handling, protective packaging, freight transport, warehousing, inventory control, and plant and warehouse site selection.

However, the co-ordination of these problems on a unified basis, and of the interactions between them and general planning, production, marketing and administration is something which has hitherto received insufficient attention. It is therefore the aim of the new PDM Centre to help remedy this by promoting the study and understanding generally of the scope and significance of physical distribution management.

National Management Game

NINE teams participating in the National Management Game, sponsored by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, International Computers Limited, and the Financial Times, have won through to Round 3 of the game. The nine successful 'boards of directors' now go on to play the semi-finals in London this week-end.

The three teams who are successful in the semi-finals on Saturday will play off the finals at ICL's headquarters on Sunday, when the winning team will become 'The National Management Champions for 1970'.

The semi-finalists are: Arkle; Fisons Ltd; Hunting Associated Industries Ltd; ICFC; Interman (McGraw-Hill Publicity Co Ltd); L. G. Syndicate; Treasurer's Department, Southend Corporation; McAnally Montgomery & Co; Parkinson Cowan Ltd, and Thompson Shepherd (Carpets) Ltd.

Inland Revenue Costs

CRITICS of the capital gains tax are familiar with the stock reply of Treasury Ministers who, when asked for the costs of operating that tax, blandly reply that it is not possible to separate its costs from those of other Inland Revenue duties. In a pamphlet entitled How the Inland Revenue Evades the Law, published by Aims of Industry, Mr Laurence Clark considers the cost of the Inland Revenue Department's operations as disclosed in its annual report.

According to Mr Clark, it seems the Department, more especially since 1947, has altered the basis of allocating costs, and when charging certain services to other departments – in particular the Valuation Department – the costs seem out of line with overall costs. His main criticism is that the published figures show neither the true costs of collection – particularly since the often quoted percentages are based upon a rapidly rising total of net revenue – nor do the figures fully reveal the substantial growth in the Inland Revenue operating costs overall.

Mr Clark suggests that the department should publish details of the costs of administering individual taxes. While such an exercise would not add greatly to the present knowledge of the Department's activities, he has a point when he stresses the desirability of clarity and precision.

THIS IS MY LIFE

Career Talks

by An Industrious Accountant

THE committee of our local accountants' group was discussing ways and means of spreading abroad some publicity advantageous to the profession, and one project favoured was a programme of 'Career Talks' for school-leavers. As a result, the secretary of the committee came on the phone to invite me to help. The school nearby was interested in accountancy, he said; the careers master would expect me at 10.30 a.m. on Thursday; eloquence, fervour, and missionary zeal would be expected.

The idea was attractive, and I devoted some time and trouble to preparing a salesman's job on vocation guidance, prior to arriving punctually at 10.20 a.m. at the school door. About 40 minutes for the peroration, followed by about 20 or so for questions, had been the secretary's forecast, so I was well laden with assorted works of reference. All that was missing, in fact, was the careers master.

He arrived at 11.30, a brisk young fellow in check sports coat and flannels. He'd got the Fifth and Sixth together, he said; as their break was fixed for 12 we'd better move sharp. Just give them the message straight and allow some time for questions; that left nearly 20 minutes for the talk... not too long for me, he hoped.

The classroom was packed with teenagers of all sizes. They looked more than impressive, with lively eyes and anticipatory grins, career talks being obviously much more enjoyable than calculus. It seemed rather a pity to have to abbreviate my talk, I reflected. I'd have to jettison some highlights, like my newest quote from Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene of 1590 about Avarice – presumably a medieval accountant-symbol:

'And in his lap an heap of coine he told . . .

And unto hell him selfe for money sold;

Accursed usurie was all his trade;

And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.'

Anyhow, there was just enough opportunity to tell the boys about business, and shareholders' rights as exemplified by the Stock Exchange quotations and the year-end balance sheets, and the Royal Mail case, and the movement of reserves, and this decade's demands for even higher skills than ever before, as well as graduate articled clerks and the chief accountants in industry. Some human interest anecdotes pointed the morals and I finished with four minutes to spare, not omitting a caustic reference to the time-table.

The questions were quick and eager and intelligent, mostly about exam results and prospects and pensions, but the last one nearly stumped me. 'If qualified accountants are such supermen by comparison with ordinary experienced clerks', asked a tall blonde-haired boy with a supercilious drawl, 'why aren't all companies compelled by law to employ only chartered chaps?'

The simplest replies were to say I rather wondered myself, or that the Chartered Institutes should do something about it, or that we'd pressurize the new Government, but fortunately the careers master intervened. We'd run out of time, he announced as the lunch bell sounded, so that 64,000 dollar question went unanswered.

Farm Budgeting

by IAN McGLASHAN, C.A.

THIS year there has been a lot of 'cuckoo' barley planted, to use a phrase perhaps unfamiliar to an urban ear. It refers to the old jingle, 'In April I fill my bill; in May I sing all day; in June I change my tune; in July away I fly', the purport of which is that a May sowing means a late harvest and a light one.

Since the farming lobby is by no means a silent one, everybody must be aware that farmers are an impoverished body of men, endlessly struggling against the elements and a government determined to do them down at the annual price review. This picture is not entirely a false one. There was perhaps a day when they were 'feather-bedded', but, alas, no longer. The average farmer exists on an economic level – due largely to the small size of his holding – which is marginal. He carries on because farming is still a way of life.

Farming is an industry foreign to most accountants, other than to those in the profession who audit, and often keep, farm books. For if there is one thing a farmer dislikes more than another it is keeping records.

What impact, then, have the new accounting techniques upon such?

Farm economists

The whole basis of farm management accounting is due to the work done thereon by the body of farm economists. Unlike political economists they speak with one voice.

Compared with industrial accountants they start off with a considerable initial disadvantage in that the average farm is a small one; and, as one writer has put it, 'It is a fallacy to suppose that the average farmer who actively dislikes paper work and has too much of it already can, simply by reading a text-book, be turned into an embryo accountant'.¹

Another writer,² makes the point that while industry has had the advantage of years of concentrated study by the professional accountant actively engaged therein, farming has not. There are few farm units large enough to employ accountants, so that farm accounting has a long way to catch up. He adds very properly that this is not to be taken as a reflection on the work of the farm economists, to whose work he pays the highest tribute. This is a statement with which we must all agree.

² Accounts and the Practical Farmer, by R. W. Smith, O.B.E., T.D., F.C.A. (Gee, 1956).

Gross margins

The present method of management accounting control in farming is called 'gross margins'.

The original recommendation was 'farm standards'. Average results were worked of yields and of costs for every crop or farm enterprise per acre with which farmers could compare their own results. These were subdivided into areas and types of farm.

But because no two farms were alike it proved, in practice, impossible to find a satisfactory average. A great step forward was achieved when a move was made from farm standards to the present method of gross margins.

This is a variant of our old friend marginal costing, whereby all variable expense (seeds, fertilizer, and sprays) are chargeable against income for each crop or enterprise; and these set against what are called fixed expense which accountants would call variable and semi-variable expense.

Under this system payroll wages are considered as fixed expense; any subcontract work, however, which can be directly costed to a crop is a charge against that crop's gross margin. And, as in a pig enterprise, where a man is employed full time on that enterprise, he is a charge against it.

The reason for considering wages as an overhead is because they are, in fact, a fixed expense – except for overtime; and because, short of keeping an elaborate costing system, it is impossible to allocate the cost accurately to any given crop. Similar considerations apply to plant costs.

Farm budgeting

Gross margin standards are now available for all crops and enterprises, by areas, through the country so that it is a relatively simple matter for a farmer to work out a budget for himself. He merely multiplies the acres he expects to sow by the margins concerned, and then calculates his remaining fixed expense, which he can do by using other available standards.

One such budget is given herewith for a 300-acre farm with an approximate four-year rotation. All calculations are based on Farm Management Pocketbook, by John Nix, of Wye College (1968).

Other expenses		2,500
			£4,981

which is £16 per acre profit, a figure which most farmers would gladly settle for.

New techniques

There have been two advances since the advent of gross margins. Firstly, the recommendation that farmers work out their own gross margins, by crop; and use these, other than the district standards, when budgeting. This is because figures can differ so much, farm by farm, depending on the fertility of the land and the personal expertise of the farmer. This becomes understandable when it is realized that the yield of wheat can range from 25 to 40 cwt per acre.

Secondly, farm economists have been experimenting with all the current techniques such as alternative and creeping budgets, linear programming and operational research, and even Monte Carlo Method (e.g., Paul Webster Farm Management, No 4, 1968).

It is here that the writer wishes to register a caveat.

The basis of all these methods is the data of gross margins, which do not include the cost of either plant or labour. Once these are included, figures of a different weight are discovered. Corn crops use relatively the same amount of these costs, one with the other, but root crops do not. And if one is searching for the ideal mix in order to achieve the maximum profit it is unrewarding to use figures which are basically unsound. It is rather like using hi-fi to discover the noisiest 'pop' group.

Recalculation

Consider the diagrams (1) to (4) herewith.

In (1), an attempt has been made to try and discover a correct charge for machinery and allocate it to each crop. Tractor requirements are calculated, plant values estimated, and costs allocated.

will be seen that there is a balance unallocated, which is to be expected. Especially in wages: anybody who does a costing on a farm is likely to get a shock when he discovers the cost of 'etcetera' labour!

The costs thus calculated of labour and plant are then deducted from the original gross margins and, finally, compared. It will thus be readily seen that the relative importance, crop by crop, varies considerably—sugar beet, for example, becomes very much less attractive.

Conclusion

It must be again stressed that the writer is enormously impressed by the work of the farm economists. And it is sincerely hoped that the foregoing will not be taken as other than helpful criticism. Its intention is to point out that the present system of gross margins is as yet imperfect. How to rectify this is still the problem. Perhaps a notational charge? Any solution to be practical must be a simple one; as, indeed, all ideal solutions are.

Industry, after all, faces the same problem; if it places too much stress on the answers thrown up by such techniques as discounted cash-flows, where the data used must be based upon estimates. This is not to decry them. But any answer is only as good as the hypothesis upon which it is based.

In farming a potato crop yield can vary, year by year, from 6 to 12 tons per acre and the price range from £10 to £20, so that any budget must be taken cum grano salis. Nevertheless, any farmer who does not produce a farm budget, and watch it, is not on the ball.

Break-even Analysis and Return on Capital

Many of the so-called new techniques of management planning are not really so novel. Here GORDON WRIGHT, B.Com., A.A.C.C.A., examines an extension of the use of break-even analysis which was the subject of articles in the Engineering Magazine in 1903 and 1910.

BREAK-EVEN analysis has for a long time recognized that the profit or loss earned by a business is determined by the relationships which exist between the revenue earned from sales and the total costs incurred over different levels of volume of production and sales. Management decisions on many aspects of these profit determinants will be based upon an analysis of the businesses costs as between fixed and variable, and the comparison of the sum of these two cost elements at different volumes of activity with the revenue that would be earned at each level. These basic relationships can be presented in visual form in a break-even chart or profitograph, such as that shown in Figure 1.

Let us assume that X Ltd has a level of costs which would be incurred irrespective of the volume of output, of £50,000 per year. Each unit of product would incur further expenses (i.e., materials, direct labour and variable overheads) of manufacture amounting to £7 per unit and the product is sold for a unit price of £12. When these values are plotted on the break-even chart in Figure 1 it can be seen that the break-even volume is 10,000 units, since at that level of activity the firm will make neither a profit or a loss. To the left of this volume we have a measure of the loss that would be incurred, and to the right the profit that would be earned at different volumes. The amount of the profit or loss can also be measured by:

Some limitations implicit in break-even analysis

So far the basic concepts are those conventionally accepted in this type of financial analysis. There are, however, two important reservations that must be made. First, the single fixed cost level clearly implies that the analysis is concerned with a situation within a single given plant capacity. If volumes in excess of that limit are to be considered, then the same level of fixed costs would not be appropriate.

Secondly, the analysis is concerned with profit and not profitability. Management is more concerned with the latter and therefore further analysis should take into account capital employed and the fact that increasing volumes may require increased capital investment.

Assessing profitability through break-even analysis

Capital employed may itself be considered in terms of its fixed and variable elements in the same way as costs. For the plant to be operative a minimum level of investment will be necessary. As volume builds up, additional investment will be required to finance working capital. If the capital investment is now plotted on the break-even chart, the relationship between this and the profit that is earned at any volume can now be expressed as a rate of return on capital.

The illustration at Figure 2 is based upon a situation where the plant has a capacity of 2,000 units per year, fixed costs of £120,000 per annum, variable costs of £100 per unit, and a selling price of £200. The 'fixed' element in the capital employed amounts to £300,000 and this increases at a rate of £50 for each unit produced over zero. Each unit requires two man-weeks to produce.

Taking the concepts of total costs, sales revenue and volume used previously, there is now added to the chart a further curve which shows the total capital employed. At zero production this measures the fixed investment of capital, and as output moves up it includes the additional investment that will be required. These values can now be related as follows. First, the total profit or loss values are noted in the profit and loss vectors. The return on capital curve can now be plotted by expressing that profit or loss as a percentage of the capital employed for that level of output which can be read off against the right-hand scale. The zero point for this scale is on the same horizontal level as the break-even point. At maximum volume the return on capital employed is 20 per cent. If only 1,600 units are made and sold, then that return drops to just over 10 per cent and is, of course, zero at the break-even volume.

If the cost of capital to the business is 10 per cent, then one can conceive of another break-even point at the 1,600 volume. This would represent the point at which the return on capital just matched the cost of that capital to the business. Any volume less than this means that the business cannot service the return that is expected by the suppliers of funds at the level of their expectations.

Fixing minimum price levels

A further statistic which management may wish to determine is the lowest price per unit or amount that must be earned on any limiting resource (in the illustration, man-weeks) in order to break even at any volume. In the example shown, if only 1,200 units can be sold, then the price must be at least £200 per unit. On the other hand, it may be an indication to management of the extent to which they can undercut competition in order to maintain volume without incurring a loss. For example, if 1,800 units can be sold then the minimum sale price for the business to break even is £166.7.

Size of the enterprise

In most businesses the size to which the concern is allowed to grow is a matter of managerial choice. Sometimes there is a series of 'natural' sizes for the business, and management must decide when they are to jump the gap to the next size. In other industries the growth may be more gradual; but even if there are no technical factors which determine size, there may be managerial ones.

In the longer run, therefore, there may be no single capacity as used in the analysis so far, but the choice of a series of more or less discontinuous sizes. Taking the data used in Figure 2, let us assume that the output could be achieved by 20 machines, and that the range of size to be considered is up to 60 machines which would have a capacity of 6,000 units. Let us further assume that costs and capital investment would expand in the same proportions to volume as shown in Figure 2.

If management now considers the economic consequences for the firm of expansion to the 20-machine size, 40-machine size and 60-machine size, respectively, the implications for the return on capital, minimum break-even price and, of course, break-even volume are shown in Figure 3. This is basically a simplified version of Figure 2 for each of the firm sizes.

If there are economies of scale, i.e., capital employed does not increase as fast as capacity, then there will be obvious advantages in going to the 60-machine size. There are also, however, some disadvantages. The smaller plant operating at full capacity will realize a profit, whereas its larger competitor at the same volume may be making a loss. Within their capacities the smaller firm can sell at a lower price and still break even than their larger competitors. Management should, therefore, only contemplate the larger capacity where they are certain of selling that volume for a number of years. To expand during a period of boom may leave the firm unprofitable when the boom collapses. While the business may weather the difficulties through the aid of outside capital whether or not the original owners retain control may be much more problematical.

Conclusions

While break-even analysis in its traditional form is a valuable aid to management, its extension to include such aspects as return on capital, minimum price, size of business and earnings required on scarce resources, adds valuable dimensions to the technique. In particular, the return-on-capital aspect becomes even more critical where the cost, investment, and sales revenue curves are not straight lines but curves. In such conditions the maximization of return becomes of prime importance in managerial decision-making.

Insurance Values for Obsolete Buildings

• by OUR INSURANCE CORRESPONDENT

IN 1967, the whole insurance market announced that as policies covering fire and special perils were renewed, they would have incorporated in them the pro rata condition of average. The aim on the part of the insurers was to raise insured values and thus their premium income. They were well aware of the fact that, due partly to oversight and partly to deliberate acts to save premium, there was a considerable measure of under-insurance.

Whilst this meant that any claim for total loss could not exceed the insured value, it did not affect the very much more common partial losses which were paid in full. Thus the position had been reached where premiums were being paid on one basis, but the majority of claims were paid on a different basis.

Clearly, this was thoroughly unsatisfactory, and the aim of applying average on a very wide scale was to correct this. The intention was that the average clause should act as a deterrent to those who, in the past, had under-insured.

To a great extent, in the period which has elapsed since the introduction of the clause, the insurers' aim of frightening policy-holders into insuring for higher values has been achieved. This is because the practical effect of the average clause is that if a claim arises under the policy, the policy-holder is able to recover only that proportion of his loss which the amount of his policy bears to the total value of the property covered at the time of the loss. It can be seen, therefore, that, if there is any under-insurance when the clause is in force, any claim is reduced in the same proportion as the under-insurance. This is generally fair since almost invariably the premiums for the classes of business where average is applied are calculated on the basis of the insured value.

Certain exceptions

Plenty of problems have arisen since insurers first announced the introduction of average, although there have been certain exceptions to its application. For instance, insurances on buildings used solely for private residential purposes, household goods and personal effects (1) therein, or (2) privately-owned and insured in the name of the owner in a building occupied for trade purposes generally have been exempt, although it has been the practice of underwriters at Lloyd's for many years to include the average clause in their policies for private householders. Although the insurance companies have never admitted it, the real reason why many householders have had this dispensation would appear to be that considerable opposition would have been met from the building societies.

As a rule, insurers have been suggesting that property should be insured for the current cost of rebuilding, including the fees of architects which would be incurred in connection with the rebuilding and the cost of removing debris from the site prior to starting the rebuilding work.

Nevertheless, this has raised plenty of difficulties. One can think of buildings of historic value, and those of massive construction where, depending on the extent of the damage, it is likely that rebuilding would not be in the same style. In fact, almost certainly a much more convenient and cheaper building would be erected.

Special basis

Now the position has been reached where many of the insurers in the market have agreed on a formula for assessing the insured value and the premium for old and obsolete buildings. As far as it goes, it can be helpful to all concerned, not least to the insurers themselves. One practical drawback is that it does not really go far enough, especially as a committee (consisting of insurance companies) after considering the special basis of valuation to be used in respect of old and out-of-date industrial buildings, agreed 'that the acceptance of a special basis of valuation for obsolete buildings should be discouraged as much as possible'.

Nevertheless, it has been agreed that industrial and commercial buildings may be regarded as being obsolete for the purpose of a special basis of valuation for insurance purposes provided four strict requirements are met.

The first qualification for this special treatment from insurers is that the building in question must be both old and no longer used for the purpose for which it was built. Secondly, it must be quite clear that the building is unsuitable for its present use.

The third qualification which must be met is that it must be impracticable for the property in question to be rebuilt in the same style. Following on from that, insurers have agreed among themselves that, in order for the special basis of valuation to be acceptable to them, the insured must provide a written undertaking to the effect that, in the event of a substantial loss, he will either replace the property with a building of modern style and materials, or alternatively, that he will purchase a similar building on the market, at a much lower cost than rebuilding the insured property in its existing form.

Those are quite strict requirements on the part of the insurers. Nevertheless, it is clear that an appreciable number of buildings will qualify under those headings, with policy-holders being prepared to give the necessary undertaking about the action which will be taken in the event of a substantial loss.

Provided a building qualifies for special treatment in this way, many insurers active in the home fire market have agreed that they will consider accepting, as a basis of valuation for the purpose of average, a value which is significantly lower than the full cost of rebuilding the insured building in its present style.

They have said that the value which must be adopted in these circumstances must be not less than the full value of a modern building. There is, however, the stipulation that the new building must provide comparable facilities with those available in the case of the insured building. Secondly, the new building must be erected in accordance with the insured's intention as stated in the undertaking. For the purpose of arriving at the insured value, to the full cost of a modern building must be added an appropriate allowance in respect of fees and site clearance.

Wider application

That is a useful start, but, in fact, the agreement between the insurers goes further. It continues by saying that certain other types of building may be regarded as being obsolete.

In the first place, there are buildings which are unoccupied or mainly unoccupied, if they are of a low market value in relation to rebuilding costs. Nevertheless, to qualify, either they must be up for sale or an undertaking must be provided by the insured to the effect that, in the event of a loss approaching the market value, they will not be rebuilt.

Where there are buildings of this nature which need to be insured, insurers have agreed that the valuation to be used for insurance purposes may be the market value, provided an appropriate allowance is made for site clearance.

Also in this particular category of property, which may be considered as obsolete, are buildings which are subject to clearance or demolition orders.

An important point which needs to be borne in mind is the age of the buildings. For instance, as a form of guidance, insurers have agreed that in the normal course of events any building which is more than 50 years old will not qualify for being considered 'old and no longer occupied for the purpose for which it was erected'. Secondly, even if a building should be unoccupied (or mainly unoccupied) and be of a low market value in relation to rebuilding costs, it is most unlikely that it will qualify as being obsolete for these purposes if it is less than 50 years old.

That is the basis on which most insurers are prepared to operate concerning the valuation to be put on old and obsolete property, although it must be stressed that generally there is scope for individual negotiation where there are special extenuating circumstances.

Secondly, there is the question of the premium which shall be payable in those cases where for old and obsolete buildings a special basis of valuation is adopted.

Premium on the full value

As is well known, in the majority of cases where property is insured, a rate of premium is simply applied to the insured value to produce the premium. Where, however, a special valuation is used on the lines indicated, it is not simply a question of applying the same rate to the low value.

That low value has been adopted mainly in the event of a total loss, or a loss of significant proportions. Many smaller claims will cost insurers the same amount, irrespective of the total sum insured on the property. It is for this reason that, when calculating the premium payable for an old and obsolete building, insurers start by thinking in terms of the premium payable on the full value (representing the cost of rebuilding in the present style, less depreciation, etc.). From the premium arrived at in this way is deducted a discount. The amount of the discount which may be deducted depends on the difference between the selected sum insured and the full value of the existing building. The larger is that difference, the greater is the discount which is allowed.

For instance, if the selected sum insured should be less than 20 per cent of the premium calculated on the full value of the property in question, the discount is 40 per cent. As the percentage which the selected sum insured bears to the value of the existing building increases, so the discount drops.

For a selected sum insured of between 20 and 30 per cent of the value of the building, the discount is 30 per cent of the premium. It is only 20 per cent where the selected sum insured is between 30 and 40 per cent of the full value, and 10 per cent for a sum insured which is between 40 and 50 per cent of the full value.

Should the special valuation produce a value which is between 50 and 60 per cent of the value, the discount allowed off the premium is no more than a nominal 5 per cent. And no discount at all is permitted under the agreement if the selected sum insured should exceed 60 per cent of the value of the existing building.

Naturally, with building costs increasing, all values may need to be raised at fairly frequent intervals. So as to try to ensure that they receive the premium to which they are entitled, insurers have made a ruling that the ratio between the selected sum insured and the value must be reviewed at least triennially; and the sum insured and/or premium must be adjusted as required.

World-wide investments add flexibility to money management.

The facility to deploy unit trust investments globally, means that a Fund can perform considerably better on average than if investments are tied to a single geographical area.

Last year, for instance, when the London stock market slipped by over 15%, the Australian market rose by almost 9%, and the Japanese by 37.6% – according to the Financial Times Actuaries All Share Index, Sydney All Ordinary Index and Tokyo New S.E. Index.

The Eight Men from Edinburgh, who manage investments for Edinburgh Securities, have wide experience in overseas markets. The value of portfolios for which they are responsible exceeds £50,000,000, and includes those of two recently launched Unit Trusts – CRESCENT INCOME FUND and CRESCENT INTERNATIONAL FUND.

The latter, as its title suggests, is committed to a growth-orientated portfolio spread throughout the world. Roughly 75% of its investments are placed outside the U.K. Dollar loan arrangements allow for dollar investment without any great exposure to the dollar premium. In fact, when the Fund was introduced these arrangements were negotiated in advance to ease the restrictions of overseas investing. These arrangements also allow for investment in external sterling areas, particularly Australia.

All overseas investment is based on thorough research which, on occasion, includes on-the-spot investigation of a company's growth potential and management expertise. Information gleaned from such field trips is made readily available to all Eight Men. Awareness of market trends is an integral part of the distinctive way this shrewd team operates.

Legal and General announce no increase in their premiums

Yes, choosing a motor insurance policy is a pretty disheartening business. A lot of motorists find that, after a year in which they were paying less on 'special plans', their premiums are going up.

Not Legal and General's. We still offer you security, stability and a fair deal at a reasonable cost. This has been our policy for the last 130 years.

Last year, we offered competitive rates to the 'best risks', and fair policies to those who didn't qualify for the new

'special plans'. This year our attitude hasn't changed. Nor have our premiums.

So when your policy is due for renewal, do business with the company that offers you security at reasonable rates.

COMPUTER COMMENTARY

Computer Sale at Sotheby's

THE last sale of the season, but the first of its kind, takes place on July 30th when an auction of computers is to be held by Sotheby's Parke-Bernet Galleries in New York. This is a change indeed from impressionist paintings and diamonds, although in the United States even race-horses and bank shares are auctioned by Sotheby's.

Items for the sale are being assembled by Time Brokers Incorporated, pioneers of computer broking in the United States, and they say that they have been approached by several large companies wanting to sell surplus computer equipment, and by smaller firms interested in buying it. An improvement in economic conditions has been a deciding factor in the timing of the sale, which promises to develop into a regular and major event.

Commenting on the auction, Mr Joseph Kirby, of Time Brokers, says that 'people who own computers treat them with as much reverence as a work of art because of their awesome capabilities and for the immensely sophisticated prospects that they offer for the enhancement of the qualities of life in the future. So, in a sense, we feel it is appropriate to sell them through Sotheby's'. He adds that even 'electronic hobbyists' may be interested. 'The devotee could start with the basic building block, which would be the storage or memory unit, then add accessories as he gains experience in the art of data processing.'

However, it is stressed that the purpose of the auction is not to sell 'antique computers' but to fulfill a genuine need for supplying modern equipment to businesses, and the items already received - valued at more than £100,000 - range from second and third generation computers to simple card-handling equipment.

A final observation on the sale comes from Mr Arnold Kagan, a director of Sotheby's, who remarks 'We are excited at this diversification of our interests into the computer hardware field.'

'Computer 70' — International Computer Exhibition in London

DETAILS have now been released of the programme of seminars at Olympia, from October 5th-9th, which will form part of 'Computer 70' - the first major international computer exhibition in Europe directed specifically to top management in industry commerce, and local government. Its aim is to promote a better understanding of the benefits of the efficient use of computers in modern management, and the seminars will thus seek to locate and define problems and processes which could benefit from data processing techniques.

Ample time will be allocated for discussion and questions, and the participants will have opportunities of seeing the very latest computer equipment and services. Subjects will include 'Management and computer bureaux'; 'Management information and its contribution to corporate planning'; 'Developing computer-based systems in a large multi-national organization'; and 'Target for 1975'. Groups of seminars will be held concurrently in specially constructed seminar theatres within the exhibition hall.

Fees are £7 per session, including entrance to the exhibition, and tickets and brochure giving full details can be obtained from the organizers.

The new Computa Learn kit, packed neatly into a modern executive briefcase, enables the student to listen to each lesson whenever and wherever he wishes.

Computa Learn

THOSE needing to acquire knowledge of electronic data processing will be able to do so anywhere and any time - at the office, at home, in the car, or on a train - with the Computa Learn system. This is a series of computer appreciation seminars recorded on to tape cassettes, supported by individual student manuals, and an audio-tuition service - all neatly packed into an executive briefcase. It has the unique built-in advantage of allowing the 'student' to repeat each lesson as often as required.

At the end of the course, participants should be able to analyse reports on operations, discuss detailed applications with systems analysts, and understand 'computer jargon'.

The cost of the tuition is twofold: teaching kit (e.g., tape recorder and tapes), which is rented at £23 per month, and student kits (e.g., instruction manuals), which are purchased as required at a cost of £24 each with reductions for twelve months' rental and numbers of manuals ordered.

A COMPUTER personnel training company is to be set up jointly in South Africa by the accountancy firm of Schwartz, Fine, Kane & Co, based in Johannesburg, and Clark Johnston Ltd, management consultants, of London.

Mr Bill Clark, of Clark Johnston, who has recently returned from a combined lecture and business tour of South Africa, has also been commissioned to develop a series of special training courses on behalf of the National Council of Chartered Accountants of South Africa which will be given this September by the training division of Clark Johnston.

Mr Clark recently addressed members of the South African Computer Society at an evening lecture at Witwatersrand University. His subject was the setting up of training programmes for computer personnel and management.

Europe's First Data Storage Centre

CLAIMED to be the first of its kind in Europe, the Hudsons Data Storage Centre provides storage facilities for the growing volume of data in the form of magnetic tape and computer print-out. Conceived originally to serve existing clients, the Centre is now extending similar facilities to other industries, among them banking, mining, insurance and the computer industry.

The Centre has a maximum capacity of 240 million linear feet of data, and security storage can be provided for 100,000 canisters of tape racked in self-locking steel bins. There are obvious advantages to users, such as economies in space, storage and handling, consolidated storage, maximum security, environmental controls tailored to computer room specifications, rapid retrieval of data, and world-wide deliveries on a routine or emergency basis.

Strict security precautions control the deposit and withdrawal of data, and the Centre has been fitted with the most advanced anti-burglar and fire detection systems.

Firesafe for Computer Tape

PROTECTION against damage by fire of highly sensitive computer tapes is the main object of the Stratford 1645T Tape Firesafe. It has been successfully tested at the Research Establishment, Boreham Wood, Herts, where it was filled with computer tapes and placed in a furnace for one hour with the temperature rising to over 1,700°F (926°C). The Firesafe was then cooled by water hose and afterwards forced open. The tapes were still in good condition and following rigorous tests by the manufacturers it was confirmed that the data was in no way affected.

Basically, 24 reels of magnetic tape can be fitted in each Firesafe unit, but units can also be supplied in banks of two or three, so that with an expanding data processing system additions can be made as required.

A feature of the 1645T is that when in the open position the drop front door of each unit forms a useful working surface. The door itself is secured by a precision-made 7-lever door lock and the overall finish is in attractive lacquer grey gloss enamel, the doors being of grained and polished wood.

J. W. Levy & Son Ltd, Thavies Inn House, Holborn Circus, London EC1.

Part of the Burroughs B 2502 system at the new Trustee Savings Banks Computer Centre at Crawley, Sussex. The computer centre has been built for the Southern Consortium of Trustee Savings Banks and will be processing work for the Surrey, Portsmouth, Oxford, Thames Valley and South Eastern Trustee Savings Banks. Six Data Preparation Centres at Oxford, Reading, Croydon, Portsmouth, Brighton and Margate will handle the work of 109 branches. The system is already handling the standing orders for all the branches and will shortly be processing the current accounts for the entire consortium.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE

International Accounting Methods

A Look at the Presentation of Swedish Accounts

THE Grängesberg Company – Gränges – had a good year in 1969. 'Gränges' is a major Swedish iron and steel organization with substantial iron ore interests abroad and equally substantial shipping interests to go with them. The group also shows all the signs of the combination of growth and diversification common to major international concerns. The accounts, for example, include for the first time the results of the Metallverken organization, a group with a name that should be self explanatory – the 'metal' being aluminium in particular – and Gränges is strong in its own 'construction' division and in its links abroad in Europe and elsewhere.

Acquisition of a controlling stake in Metallverken, for example, involved the issue of 800,000 new Gränges shares and left Gränges with 78.2 per cent of Metallverken's capital with Alcan Aluminium holding another 20.8 per cent of the shares. This year Gränges has acquired a million newly-issued shares in the Canadian mining enterprise Bethlehem Copper Corporation, representing about 15 per cent of the share capital.

The iron ore interests are predominantly through the Lamco joint venture – for which Gränges is manager – in Liberia. This sketchy, and admittedly inadequate, description of the Gränges group does, one hopes, give the impression of an international organization in the metal development and using industry from iron ore production to the use of finished steel and iron products in construction.

Auditors' report

The appearance of Gränges's accounts in this column, however, is to show methods of accounting and account presentation under Swedish company law. Gränges accounts are provided in an English language version and explanatory notes are provided. The first point to be made is to draw attention to the form of the auditors' report which, it will be seen, goes substantially further than the British form in that the auditors' report on the company, its finances, its management and its board rather than merely on its books.

In some important respects (the basis of reporting inventories is one) accounting principles in Sweden differ from those generally accepted elsewhere, the Swedish principles having been developed and accepted 'because of existing procedures for computing income tax liability'.

It is explained that Gränges has made provisions in excess of known requirements by charges to the income it has previously reported and the effect is the immediate reduction of tax burdens and the corresponding conservation of cash. The company has also written down certain investments and the combined effect is the accumulation of substantial reserves which can only be treated as equity to the extent that they do not involve an element of tax deferment, as in the case of stock reserves and accumulated additional depreciation.

First in, first out

To include these reserves as equity, a deduction should be made, it is explained, for the portion deemed to represent deferment of income tax which approximates to the estimated income taxes that would be payable if the reserves were restored to taxable earnings. This provision can be computed at the net effective tax rate applicable in Sweden in 1969, which was about 50 per cent. This percentage of the aggregate reserves thus represents the additional tax liability.

Stocks are priced at cost or market value, whichever is the lower, and generally on a 'first in, first out' basis. The company's practice is to make appropriations to stock reserves as deductions from taxable income until the reserves amount to 60 per cent of the stocks at lower of cost or market value. If stocks have decreased at any one year-end, the limit of 60 per cent may be applied to the average of inventory amounts at the end of the two preceding years.

Swedish law allows companies to revalue land and buildings within certain closely defined limits and to issue to existing stockholders at the same time capital stock with a corresponding aggregate par value. The effect of revaluation in the latest accounts is not material. The book depreciation is on the straight-line method, generally at annual rates of 2 per cent for office buildings and dwelling-houses and 4 per cent for industrial buildings.

Depreciation

Swedish tax regulations allow depreciation on machinery, equipment and ships either on the straight-line method at a maximum of 20 per cent per annum of the purchase price or on the declining balance method at the maximum rate of 30 per cent on the remaining book value. Changes from one method to the other may be made in any one year and the company 'has availed itself of this possibility to reduce taxable income'.

In order to present a 'correct result' of the year's operations, the 1969 depreciation requirements of SKr 178 million have been calculated consistently on the straight-line method. The additional depreciation of SKr 61 million is shown as appropriations in the profit and loss account.

The accumulated difference between depreciation requirements and book depreciation, although material, is not shown separately from total accumulated book depreciation. Significant renewals and additions are capitalized at cost. Maintenance and repairs, minor renewals and improvements are charged to income. Capital gains or losses on sales of land, buildings, machinery and equipment are shown as extraordinary income or cost, but the cost and accumulated depreciation of property sold is not included in the balance sheet.

Legal reserves

There are two forms of income tax in Sweden – State income tax and local income tax which were respectively 40 per cent and an average 20 per cent in 1969. Local income tax assessed for one year is deductible from the taxable income for State income tax purposes the next year.

Swedish companies are bound by law to carry specific reserves. Of the annual statutory net income, 10 per cent must be put to legal reserve (called the ordinary legal reserve) until it equals 20 per cent of the aggregate par value of the issued capital stock. Thereafter, so long as a company's liabilities (excluding certain mortgage loans) are greater than the sum of the issued capital stock and the legal reserve, such appropriations must continue but may then be made to a special legal reserve which may be restored to distributable retained earnings in a specified manner, provided the sum of the issued capital stock and the ordinary legal reserve is maintained at least equal to the company's liabilities.

If a dividend of more than 5 per cent of net assets, as shown in the statutory accounts, is declared and if the issued capital stock and the legal reserves are less than the liabilities, an amount equal to the excess must be set aside to ordinary legal reserve or, if that reserve equals 20 per cent of the issued share capital, to the special legal reserve.

American style

The Gränges report is quite a lavish document of 40 pages, of which the accounts and notes of Gränges and of the Metallverken Group occupy the final 16. Ahead of the accounts are 24 pages of the review of operations and the report of the board of directors, including sections on personnel and organization (a work force of 25,060, of whom 18,375 are in Sweden); the ore and steel division; the international mining division; Svenska Metallverken; the shipowning division (18.2 million tons of cargo, including 12.8 million tons of iron ore carried during the year, and the company's biggest ore carrier of 106,400 tons delivered) and finally the 'recommended appropriation of profits'.

The whole is presented in the style of American rather than British company reporting in so far as make-up, print, pictures and layout are concerned.

The accounts were presented to the annual meeting held on May 29th and the auditors' report, it will be noticed, is dated March 24th which, considering the operational, financial, and geographical extent of the organization, is decidedly prompt reporting.

It can be safely assumed that the directors and president were duly discharged from liability for their conduct of the company's affairs during the period covered by the annual report. That condition certainly makes company directorship sound an onerous business.

Snia Viscosa

BY coincidence, this column has received from Italy the English version of the 1969 accounts of Snia Viscosa, the Italian man-made fibres company. The auditors' report in this case opens with the statement that the 1969 balance sheet may be condensed in figures of 'assets' of 507,432.1 million lire less 500,094.4 million of 'liabilities, capital, reserves and profits brought forward from previous years' to provide 7,337.7 million lire of 'net profit for the year'.

The net profit figure is reconciled with 'returns' of 209,989.6 million lire less 202,651.9 million of 'costs'. Returns being operating profit, financial and sundry revenue and new plant, and costs being balances brought forward, purchases, sundry costs and charges and depreciation less balances to carry forward.

The auditors point out that the 15,822.7 million lire charged for ordinary depreciation is the 'maximum allowed by the Ministry of Finance' and that the accounts are 'fully in accord with the company records which have been kept regularly and methodically'.

Stating that 'the accruals and discounts were agreed with us and are also in perfect agreement with the conservative criteria adopted by the directors in their valuation of the company's assets', the auditors 'recommend that the accounts . . . be adopted as they stand' and 'endorse the directors' recommendations regarding the allocation of net profit'.

The auditors also declare themselves in favour of a motion to amalgamate a number of the company's subsidiaries.

Opting for Doomsday

THE Grand Junction Company Ltd, which is a mixture of property investment company and investment trust with the accent very much on property, has opted for 'Doomsday' values for its quoted investments. Or as the directors' report put it 'Under the provisions of section 32, Finance Act 1968, an election has been made to adopt the April 6th, 1965, values for all quoted securities held on that date, and the book value of the securities so held has been adjusted to those values.'

The change to Doomsday, with subsequent additions at cost from the previous years 'at cost or under', resulted in a net surplus on revaluation of £490,325 taken to capital reserve and there was also a revaluation of properties which resulted in a net surplus of as much as £9,612,180 in the group position.

Referring to the investment position, the chairman in his review states that 'The amount of capital gains tax that would be payable on the sale of those investments can now be ascertained by deducting the balance sheet value from the valuation and applying to the resultant figure the appropriate rate of tax, in our case 45 per cent.' In Note 4 to the accounts this contingent liability to capital gains tax is stated as £250,124.

On the question of property values and capital gains tax no provision has been made 'in view of the length of time, costs and problems that would be involved in establishing a meaningful figure'. The auditors draw attention to this point in their report.

Note 2 — Pension outlays and provision for pensions

The year's trading result, incl. Metallverken, has been charged with about SKr 64m. to cover pension outlays. Of this total, about SKr 12m. was actual pension payments.
In addition, the difference in earlier years between the actual and the booked pension liability, for Metallverken, SKr 4.2m., has been set aside in the form of an appropriation. This brings the actual and the booked pension liability into complete agreement.

Note 3 — Total deliveries

The only amounts entered as total deliveries for the International Mining Division are the Group's gross revenues as Manager in Liberia and as Lamco's sales agent. The Group's share in the year's profit of the Swedish Lamco Syndicate, SKr 12.7m. (15.9), is entered under "Dividends, etc."

Note 4 — Depreciations (in millions of Swedish Kronor)

The depreciation requirements were calculated using the original purchase values of all facilities now in use, and the depreciation rates were based on their service lives as individually estimated.

The book depreciations break down as follows:

Note 6 — Inventories and reserve on inventories

The inventories entered in the Balance Sheet have been valued at purchase or replacement cost, whichever was the lowest. The price increase during the year on Metallverken's metal inventories, mainly copper, was SKr 22.5m. (0.3). The effect of this on the trading profit was eliminated by a direct increase of the reserve on inventories.

In addition, the reserve on inventories was raised by an appropriation of SKr 47.9m. This brings the total increase in reserves on inventories for the Group to SKr 70.4m.

Parent Company Auditors' Report

In our capacity as Auditors to Trafikaktiebolaget Grängesberg—Oxelösund we hereby submit the following report for the year 1969.

We have examined the Annual Report, studied the Accounts, the Minutes and other documents bearing upon the financial position and the management of the Company, and made such other enquiries as we considered necessary.

The detailed checking of the records by random sampling has been carried out by the Company's internal audit department, which has submitted to us a report thereon.

The provisions of the Corporation Act concerning the disclosure of shareholdings and group relationships have been complied with.

Our audit has not revealed any occasion for censure in respect of the accounting documents, the Company's book-keeping, the valuation of its assets or any other aspect of the conduct of the Company's affairs.

The Board and the President recommend that the balance of profit brought forward from 1968, together with the profit entered for 1969, be appropriated as follows:

be appropriated as follows:
a dividend to the shareholders of 12 Swedish Kronor per share	69 600 000.—
leaving as the balance of the disposable profit	92 518 690.33
	SKr 162 518 690.33

This recommendation does not conflict with the provisions of the Corporation Act concerning appropriations to legal reserves or with sound business practice.

We recommend that the Balance Sheet as at December 31, 1969, included in the Annual Report and signed by us, be adopted, and that the profits be appropriated as recommended above, and that the Directors and the President be discharged from liability for their conduct of the Company's affairs during the period covered by the Annual Report.

CITY NOTES

THE sentiment of the market is being helped by confidence that the new Government will be strong enough to deal with current economic problems of lack of growth and spiralling prices. It is also being helped by the new Government's promise of more industrial incentive and less government interference.

But the market has to accept a fair amount of unpalatable fact in terms of discouraging company news and still discouraging industrial reports of strikes, unofficial and official, and of a fresh price and wage explosion.

When sentiment wins, the equity market has a good day. When facts take over it has a bad one, with neither type of day as yet indicating any worth-while improvement in the level of business turnover.

Of encouragement to the equity market is the advance achieved in the gilt-edged sector, where hopes that eventually the new Government may be able to work some miracle in the sphere of reduced interest rates have led to a fair amount of buying of medium-dated stocks.

Since a firm gilt-edged market is a prerequisite of an improving equity market, the rally in Government stock prices and the extent of the support received is encouraging to equity followers.

EVER since the take-over attempt by Sir Harold Samuel 17 years ago there has been something of a take-over aura surrounding the Savoy Hotel group. Reports of a bid have risen to the surface of dealings in the company's shares almost every year. Knowledge that Trafalgar House Investments has bought a near 10 per cent holding of Savoy 'A' shares has inevitably aroused fresh take-over hopes or fears, according to which way the situation is viewed.

But Trafalgar's holding is similar to a number of other influential holdings in the company's equity. It is perhaps inevitable that the Savoy Hotel company should attract influential shareholders. None of them, however, has anything like a controlling influence.

EXPORTERS, Mr A. D. P. Edwards, managing director of Export Finance Consultants, said at a recent trade conference, should become more flexible in the use of foreign currencies. Mr Edwards maintained that by marketing their products overseas in sterling, British exporters had denied themselves additional net profits in the region of £40 million last year. He said 'At a time when sterling was weak the average premium throughout 1969 on the three months' forward sale of Scandinavian and European currencies as well as the US dollar was approximately 4 per cent per annum, and at one period ranged from 8 per cent to 16 per cent per annum, i.e., 2 per cent to 4 per cent flat on every 90-day invoice.'

THE proposed merger between Metropolitan Estate and Property Corporation and Hill Samuel has let loose considerable City comment – most of it hostile. As so often happens under such conditions, comment by the parties concerned attempting to answer the criticism or explain the motives of the merger have only made matters worse and the comment more caustic.

Criticism ranges from the particular of the suggested terms offered to shareholders in Hill Samuel, to the general of the suggestion that the idea was born of the slough of despond into which the City had sunk three months or so ago when the political polls were pointing what proved to be the wrong way.

There is considerable debate as to whether Metropolitan Estate is going to become a merchant bank or whether Hill Samuel is going to become a property group. There seems to be a majority view that rather like the once-intended merger between Unilever and Allied Breweries, the MEPC-Hill Samuel merger may be a bright idea for the wrong reasons.

Ascota

Let's face it, a fast, accurate book-keeping system employing the minimum staff, at all levels, is essential to the economical growth of every business in the 70's.

You may be mechanising your book-keeping for the first time or you may be looking for additional equipment to cope with decimalisation, in either case Ascota provides the practical and economical answer.

Ascota mechanised accounting machines offer the highest all-round performance for the minimum outlay. Streamlined, compact and portable they are precision engineered for long life, accuracy and reliability.

A unique system of standard programming has resulted in minimal background costs. The long term benefits are considerable, the capital outlay negligible by comparison with most other systems.

Write or phone for Colour Brochure and specifications of the new Ascota range.

"We need about £100,000."

"Why not try Charterhouse?"

At Charterhouse we've been providing capital for industry for over 30 years. So we do know all about it.

But we are rather different from most of the other people you might advise your clients to talk to. For one thing we really understand the problems of the medium sized business from a businessman's point of view. We have to. We own and run a number of such businesses ourselves. When you talk to us you are talking to experienced businessmen not only to financiers. You – or your clients – will come to know us personally. And, when you know us as individuals, we think you will find that we're direct and easy to deal with. We don't seek control. We do seek to see that our customers get the capital they want. Let's take an example.

In 1966 Charterhouse acquired for £30,000 a 10% interest in a newly-formed group with plant hire and plastics activities. This enabled the owner to have some capital of his own. Charterhouse also made the company an unsecured loan of £170,000 to finance expansion of the plastic business. Subsequently a 50% interest in this was sold to another company, which was able to provide specialised management and technological expertise. Charterhouse has since agreed to acquire a further 15% in the group, and, at the same time, to provide bridging finance of £100,000 to enable the plant hire company to expand to the point at which it can be floated. The value of the group has grown to approximately £1.5m., some five times greater than in 1966. And the owner has become a rich man—through taking the right kind of financial partner at a critical point in the growth of his group.

Charterhouse Development Company, a member of the Charterhouse Group, helped to make this success story possible. It can do the same for your clients.

Contact us, and we'll be pleased to send copies of our booklet on this subject. Next time you're asked about sources of capital, it will be useful to have one handy.

Academic Association Proposed

SIR, — In recent years those of us in the educational sector have been heartened both by the increasing recognition of the educational value of accounting studies and by the profession's new interest in education, training and research. There has been a marked growth of accounting studies in schools, colleges and universities, and research in our subject is now seriously pursued in many institutions.

The progress can proceed without any formal co-ordinating organization, but many of us look enviously at the situation in the USA where the American Accounting Association (the AAA) with its 11,000 members, its journal (Accounting Review), its research committees, its annual convention, and other activities, is of invaluable assistance to its members in advising them of new developments and in sponsoring and co-ordinating research.

In the UK the various accountancy bodies have their education committees and research foundations, but there would seem to be advantages in having an independent academic association on similar lines to the AAA. In point of fact there are, at present, three independent associations in the UK specifically concerned with accounting education and/or research. These are the AUTA, ALIA, and BAFA.

AUTA — the Association of University Teachers of Accounting is an organization whose objective is 'the promotion of the study and teaching of accounting, especially within the universities'. At present the association is being re-organized after a period of stagnation and, therefore, there may be proposals under consideration of which the writer is unaware. Up to the present, membership has been virtually limited to members of the staffs of UK universities. This would seem to restrict the numbers eligible for membership to something less than 150 — with such a small membership base it is difficult to envisage the association organizing activities comparable with those of the AAA. There is at present no membership subscription, but if the association is to develop, one must soon become necessary.

ALIA. — The objects clause in the constitution of The Association of Lecturers in Accountancy states that it exists (inter alia) 'to provide opportunities for discussion and communication between those concerned in the teaching of accountancy and allied subjects.

To develop and stimulate interest in teaching methods.

To promote research into accountancy and allied subjects and to provide a means of co-ordinating such research.

To disseminate through published literature, conferences, courses, and such, information related to accountancy and allied subjects and the teaching thereof, and to provide a service to members in connection with modern developments in those matters.'

Membership is restricted to members of the recognized accounting bodies (and graduates with appropriate degrees) who are engaged in teaching accounting in higher or further education. Membership is approximately 300 most of whom are in 'further education' colleges. The officers and members of the executive committee are from such colleges. The association has held a number of successful conferences in recent years and it issues a useful quarterly magazine ALIA Bulletin, to members.

BAFA — the British Accounting and Finance Association has the following aims:

- (a) to stimulate research in the field of accountancy and finance;
- (b) to promote the discussion of research results, and of new ideas in the field, by the organization of national and regional conferences;
- (c) to sponsor publication of new material in the field, including conference papers.

The Association was formed in December 1969. There are no restrictions on membership, but the overwhelming majority of the officers and council members are university 'academic accountants'. There does, however, seem to be the intention of covering a rather wider membership than the AUTA or ALIA.

It seems fairly clear that the stated objectives and activities of these three associations overlap to a considerable extent and the writer (a member of two of the bodies) suggests that they could, with advantage, merge. The main advantages to be gained from such a merger are:

- (1) If integration of the professional institutes takes place the existing untidy range of professional accountancy bodies will be replaced by three monolithic institutes operating in distinct areas of the UK. The competition between the various associations, existing at present, has stimulated research and educational activities but, even so, their efforts in these fields have been the subject of valid criticism. If the spur of competition is removed there is the possibility that accounting research and education will suffer unless there is a strong independent academic organization.
- (2) There would be the possibility of issuing an accounting journal of academic standing. The existing bulletin of ALIA already performs a useful function, but with more resources, a wider readership, and a larger pool of potential contributors this could be expanded.
- (3) Wasteful duplication of activities would be avoided. At present there is little, if any, duplication as ALIA is the only body which has been active over the last four to five years, but if the organizations do expand there is this danger. Arising from this, members' subscriptions might be higher than is necessary if the associations develop independently.
- (4) At present there are various restrictions on membership of AUTA and ALIA. There may well have been valid reasons for these in the past, but with the expanded role of accounting it can be maintained that many who are not qualified accountants, or who are not lecturers, can nevertheless contribute to and gain from membership of a body of the type that is being advocated.
- (5) It might be argued that the specialized interests of such groups as university lecturers or technical college lecturers would be neglected if the proposal were to be adopted. ALIA has been particularly active in making representations, where necessary, to the educational authorities and the accountancy professional bodies, and it might be thought that such activities would have to cease. There is, however, no reason why such specialized activities should not be carried on by appropriate subcommittees of an enlarged association. The work of such committees might even be made easier by virtue of the increased influence that a larger body could be expected to exercise.

- (6) The increased resources of money and ability should lead to faster progress being made in research on accounting topics and in improvements in accounting education.

I hope that the above points will be considered by the Councils and members of the bodies mentioned.

Yours faithfully,

Heriot-Watt University,
Edinburgh.

The Future of the Profession

SIR, — In your issue of June 25th, you published a letter from the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, in which he says '... the Council has had its opportunity to state its case and the opponents must be free to do likewise without constant interventions from the Council'.

I cannot but be struck by the contrast between this very fair utterance and the conduct of the meeting held at the Albert Hall on June 24th, in which there were numerous and lengthy interventions from the platform, not limited by the normal convention of only speaking once in a debate, to answer comments from the floor of the hall made by individuals who in the circumstances had no opportunity to respond.

For that reason I am troubling you with a copy of a letter I have addressed to Sir Ronald Leach, dealing with certain points made by him upon my own observations to which I was unable to make any answer.

In the course of the meeting those opposing the scheme were reproached that they offered no alternative suggestions. In the hope that it may be of assistance to the Council, I am setting down in this letter certain suggestions which seem to me to be viable and proper alternatives to the scheme proposed.

In the first place, the Institutes of Chartered Accountants should welcome as full members those members of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants who can show significant professional experience either in practice or in the office of a practising member. Members of the Association not having this experience should be offered associate membership, similar to that offered to the incorporated members after the integration with The Society of Incorporated Accountants. Such members would be unable to enter into training contracts, to perform reserved functions, or to obtain a practising certificate.

Practitioners in the profession should welcome the opportunity of being the sole training channel for chartered accountants, so that industry and the profession, alike, would seek recruits through them. The existing, and somewhat illogical, rule under which all members of the Institute are bound to become Fellows after a certain period of time should be amended and, in place, it should be provided that those who wish to practise the profession must show a minimum of three years' service in a practising office after admission as Associates. Members who wish to proceed straight into industry after passing their Final Examinations could therefore do so, but would remain as Associates unless and until they saw fit to return to the profession and acquire the necessary practising experience to proceed to Fellowship. Members applying for a practising certificate would be required to become Fellows before so doing.

Members of the Institute wishing to enter such specialized streams as municipal treasurers and accountants and cost and works accountants could and should do so after acquiring their qualification as Associates. Individuals wishing to enter one or other of the specialized channels ab initio could train in those channels. For those wishing to go directly into industry and commerce there are many, and will no doubt be more, bodies which would welcome them as members on the basis of a purely industrial or commercial training. Industry might also prefer to train its own staff at the appropriate levels — but would, no doubt, still require its quota of chartered accountants. On this basis a chartered accountant would still be what the public has always recognized — a man professionally trained. Under the scheme as now proposed anyone engaging a chartered accountant would need — as Mr Stanley Dixon admitted — to inquire into the precise qualification and training before knowing just what kind of chartered accountant he was! Despite what has been said by the protagonists of the scheme, confusion in the public mind would be very much greater under their proposals rather than less.

This alternative suggestion is offered for criticism which it will, no doubt, receive, but it seems to me to offer much better hope of a properly organized profession than the so-called integration scheme.

Yours faithfully,

London EC2.

My Dear Ronnie,

INTEGRATION

As I and the majority of the speakers at the meeting on June 24th observed the normal convention of speaking only once, I had no opportunity of replying then to your comments upon what I had said. I am therefore writing this letter to you and I shall send a copy of it to The Accountant early next week.

In the first place, you referred to my complaint as to the procedure under which this important matter was put forward as a 'package deal', and as far as I could gather your reply was that to deal with it at full length would have been very inconvenient for those promoting it. In other words, you were prepared to sacrifice principle to expediency. I regard this reply as an open admission of the justice of my complaint and would add that the reason you gave did not excuse what was done.

I did say, and I repeat, that chartered accountants can do all that the more specialized accountants can do, and I do not think that your reply — that I was suffering delayed-action effects of a long-past examination success — even if true was relevant. The point remained unanswered that many — obviously professionally trained — chartered accountants can and do make careers in public and commercial service but few of those who train ab initio as specialists do the reverse.

I think you concurred in, if you did not originate, the comment that the Report of the Committee over which W. E. Parker presided was now some years out of date.

I think, in this respect, he and you were misleading yourselves and your hearers by confusing the undoubted changes in techniques and practices which have taken place with the fundamentals of the profession. The words which I quoted from the Parker Report dealt only with the essentials of a 'good professional upbringing' and the requirements of example and environment'. The need for that example and environment is greater rather than less by reason of the changes which have taken place, which have removed the atmosphere of the commercial and public authority office even further from the essential background of a professional office.

Although I made – somewhat facetious – comment upon bodies carrying the word 'accountant' in their title, I would not like it to be thought that the point was purely one of humour. The virtues – as I am not afraid to claim them – gained by training in a professional office may be of the greatest value to people working in public authorities' and in company service, but could not be obtained only in such a service. The fact that those fields of service have been widely infiltrated by members trained in the profession may very well be the reason – or one of the reasons – for the high standards observed in them. I myself rather think that those high standards would not have been achieved without the infiltration of the professionally-trained men.

You referred very kindly to the long period over which we have worked together. From such long experience I am confident that you will appreciate that this letter and its being made public is the only way in which I can correct any misunderstandings arising from our exchanges.

Yours sincerely,

SAM.

We are authorized to publish the following reply from Sir Ronald Leach to Mr Coulson's letter.

My dear Sam,

INTEGRATION

May I deal with one misunderstanding in your letter of June 26th. I did not say that the reason for presenting a 'package deal' was convenience or expediency. I said that the underlying reasons had been discussed around the country at meetings of members and it had been explained that each section of the scheme is dependent on another section. It is desired to raise educational standards, hence the need for a second tier, particularly to help small practitioners and to assist industry.

It is desired – and in my view essential – to train in industry, but if we train in industry to the high standard we propose to do, should we obtain candidates when other disciplines are training in a different way? Thus the scheme must be taken as a whole and is, in my view, a logical combination of interlocking proposals.

With regard to your comments on the Parker Report there is no dispute about a 'good professional upbringing' and the requirements of 'example and environment'. It is for this reason that the concept of a training contract is to be maintained for those who choose the industrial or public sector streams. The training requirements for those who choose the practising stream are, of course, unaltered.

I have sent a copy to The Accountant.

Yours ever,

RONNIE.

SIR, – I do not feel that Mr C. Croxton-Smith's comments (June 25th issue) on what appears to me to be quite a reasonable letter should pass unchallenged – although, as a 'commercial' member of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, I hold no particular brief for Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland.

• Firstly, they do not enter into any discussion on the reason for issuing proxy cards in advance (whether it be 'breach of faith' or simply the action of a Council which is hamstrung by its own rules, regulations, and restrictions, as Mr Croxton-Smith suggests). They simply warn members (like myself) who do not have the time to read up and comply with these tortuous procedures, to beware!

Secondly, it seems to me that Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland have summarized the position regarding the attendance of district society committees quite accurately. They even state that the committee members 'are far from unanimous'. Members with experience of district societies will know the sense of loyalty to the Institute which exists: many members are on, or aspiring to be on, the Council of the Institute, and many more have friends there (there is certainly nothing wrong with that!). A good example of this loyalty is shown in the amazing written statement of Mr Robert Keens (President, Beds, Bucks, and Herts Society), 'I, as your new President, have made my principal target for this second year the raising of funds to cover this purchase of the Beds, Bucks and Herts Society gift of silver to the Institute'.

I can read no implication of 'breach of faith' into Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland's letter – I wonder why Mr Croxton-Smith is so sensitive? Surely the Institute's official line is to persuade us to accept the scheme for integration – and Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland's to dissuade: fair enough.

In his letter, Mr Croxton-Smith states that members of district society committees are 'representatives of the membership within their district society areas'. I understand that the membership of the ICA is approximately 50 per cent non-practising – although the committee of my district society (London) consists of 21 practising and eight non-practising (one of the latter being 'unfilled'). Of the 4,500 course attendants in this society last year, it appears that only between 1 in 12 and 1 in 50 (not 50/50!) was a non-practising member (I have been specifically refused the exact figures by the Secretary). There has been only one non-practising President of the ICA in its history, and all three presidential offices are at present filled by practising members. I feel that the remarkable lack of facilities and representation for non-practising members is a vital consideration when deciding on both the scheme of integration and the increase in subscriptions.

From my reading of his letter the President appears to suggest that these district society 'representatives' are representative. Perhaps he could explain himself more fully through the medium of your columns? A few facts and figures might help.

Yours faithfully,

MICHAEL P. STANLEY,

Accounting Gobbledygook

SIR, — Professor Stamp may well be right when, in addressing the Association of Lecturers in Accountancy, you report him as saying that the average accountancy practitioner displays a contempt for book-learning, and I don't want to be counted among those who deplore everything he has said about accountants and accountancy in recent months. However, I would like to suggest to him that he might profitably direct some of his criticism at the apparent inability of many of his fellow-academics to communicate their thoughts to the profession at large.

As a working accountant I try to keep abreast of the main stream of academic thinking, but the over-riding impression I get from reading the output from many academic accountants is the sheer tedium of their prose. Heaven knows, day-to-day accountancy jargon is bad enough — particularly when it has to be explained to the layman — but I cannot for the life of me understand why it is that when a man takes up a lecturing career he feels impelled to adopt all the trappings of the new accounting 'gobbledygook' (my dictionary defines that as 'pompous nonsense').

Unless they want to be condemned forever to taking in each other's verbal washing, they have got to learn to communicate their ideas to their real audience — the broad mass of accountants — in good, plain English. A knowledge of high-flown jargon is not synonymous with intellectual ability and the sooner they learn that simple lesson, the sooner they will begin to get their real message across.

Perhaps the new Advisory Board of Accountancy Education should recommend the late Sir Ernest Gower's The Complete Plain Words as compulsory reading for the next generation of accountancy students.

Yours faithfully,

Harpenden, Herts. DESMOND GOCH, F.A.C.C.A.

Numerate and Literate

SIR, — Your article, 'Numerate and Literate' (June 4th issue), seems based on two rather hopeful assumptions. They are, firstly, that raising the academic qualifications required of new clerks will automatically make the profession more literate; and secondly, that literacy is synonymous with spelling.

Further education now means not a more general, but a more specialized education. Even the Scottish Institute's ideal of an entirely graduate entry is unlikely to bring sweeping improvements in the ability to communicate. There is no guarantee that such ability will automatically be conferred upon a man who has studied a non-literary subject. The universities produce quite large numbers of semi-literate scientists and others.

Your article goes on to berate the profession for misspelling 'separate' and 'supersede', yet surely literacy is more concerned with communicating ideas than with the strict observance of the gospel according to Fowler. And is not the prime aim of accountancy to communicate information both between specialists and to the non-specialist?

We learn largely by imitation, and the books that we read are likely to affect the way we write. What hope is there, then, if our only example is the accountancy textbook? Take this gem from Spicer and Pegler's Practical Auditing:

'A company is a subsidiary of another company if the company is a subsidiary of any other company which is the other company's subsidiary'.

The spelling is impeccable, but has the thought found its clearest expression?

The problem of communication is not, of course, peculiar to our own profession. In the last few days it has reappeared in the Rose Report on Management Education:

'Managers should first learn to write English and less of it.'

And in nudity at Keele University:

'Our central theme is of course alienation. People are not able to communicate.' (The Sunday Times, June 28th.)

So perhaps carrying a pocket dictionary is not the whole answer.

Yours faithfully,

PAUL RAIMOND.

London SE24.

Those Damn Statistics

SIR, — We assume other provincial practitioners like ourselves are now being flooded with the new form E.D.90 which is issued by the Department of Employment and Productivity and which purports to require (apparently in advance of the statute) a return from each employer of the number of male and female part-time and full-time employees on his payroll on June 15th, 1970, for each establishment under his control.

The front of the form explains that this is required because national insurance cards will in due course be abolished and contributions will be paid through PAYE. The explanation then goes on:

'a new method for counting the numbers employed has therefore to be found and the only practicable one is an annual census based on information supplied by every employer who holds pay records. Since annual employment censuses will provide the statistics required for a wide variety of economic purposes it is essential . . .'

The following questions occur to us:

- (1) If contributions will be paid through PAYE, then presumably a PAYE record will be available for every employee. Why can this not provide the count of employed persons?
- (2) Many employees do not have national insurance cards at all, e.g., cleaners on less than eight hours per week, wives working for husbands etc. How did the statistical department cope with these previously?
- (3) 'Will provide the statistics required.' By whom?
- (4) 'For a wide variety of economic purposes.' What are these purposes that they cannot be satisfied by national insurance cards still in existence?
- (5) Why cannot the PAYE cards, when issued for employees, provide the necessary information?
- (6) Several of the forms have incorrect firm titles. Where did the department get the names and addresses from?
- (7) The form is issued by the Department of Employment and Productivity. It may well give a lot of employment to Civil Servants and their computers, but for us, accountants who have to complete the forms, it will reduce our useful productivity enormously. Will anybody pay for this service?
- (8) The form states that annual estimates of the numbers of persons in employment are needed for the assessment of the employment position at all levels. Can anybody tell me what useful purpose this will serve?

I can understand unemployment figures being important.

- (9) The form states that the present full-scale census is now being made to operate with the minimum of difficulty for employers. Who outside the Civil Service will agree with this statement?
- (10) Can anybody please advise on the legality of the demand for completion of these forms, and the penalty for non-completion?

Yours faithfully,
FIGURE SATURATION.

Let's All Go to the Opera

SIR, - Sadler's Wells Opera is now well established at the London Coliseum in the heart of London's theatreland. At certain performances price concessions are offered for parties numbering 20 or more. These concessions which enable one to buy the best seats in the theatre for about half price are an excellent way of introducing opera to one's staff, and at the same time for them to have an enjoyable evening in the West End. The Coliseum is also able to make special catering arrangements so this can add even more enjoyment to a special occasion.

For a number of years I have arranged parties both to Covent Garden and to Sadler's Wells, and I know from experience that members of the staff, particularly the younger ones, have been 'converted' to opera and now make regular visits.

There is always a varied repertoire, appealing to all tastes, and may I suggest to accountants that they make up parties from their various organizations and take advantage of the excellent facilities at the Coliseum. Mr Rupert Rhymes, Head of Publicity and Marketing at the Coliseum, will be very pleased to supply further information to anyone who may care to write to him as follows: Sadler's Wells Opera, London Coliseum, St Martin's Lane, London WC2.

Yours faithfully,
Southend-on-Sea. PETER FRANCIS, F.C.I.S.

'Incomplete Records' Problem

SIR, - I entirely agree with Mr David Gordon (July 2nd issue), and I could go further. It is not only in cases involving incomplete records that the absence of paid cheques causes difficulty, the problem exists at all levels of auditing and preparation of accounts for clients. It is not made any easier by the exhortations which we continually receive to improve our standard of performance.

What is more important is for computers and those responsible for their operation to improve their standards of performance. When this happy day arrives we may be less dependent on the common or garden old-fashioned voucher or the paid cheque which provides a less dependable substitute, but which is better than nothing.

Yours faithfully,
Maidstone, Kent. R. W. SMITH.

Dynamic Auditing in a Changing World

: Internal Auditors' International Conference

MORE than 600 members, including four members of the London Chapter, attended the 29th Annual International Conference of the Institute of Internal Auditors, held in Atlanta, Georgia, USA, last month. The conference theme was 'Dynamic Auditing in a Changing World.'

Wide range of professional topics

The conference was opened by Mr C. L. Davis, Director of Finance, City of Atlanta, with the conference general chairman, Mr Robert L. Bennett of Lockheed-Georgia, presiding. Each member had the opportunity of attending any three from a wide range of technical sessions, the subjects being:

- (1) Don't be half-safe with EDP.
- (2) Audit environment in the 70s.
- (3) Auditing corporate financing.
- (4) How to select and train qualified auditors.
- (5) Sampling for profit.
- (6) Effective audit reports for management.
- (7) Operations research techniques in auditing.
- (8) Innovations in security.

- (9) Bridging the gap - internal and external auditing.
- (10) There is a place for traditional auditing.
- (11) The auditor's role in acquisitions.
- (12) Audits of internal operations.
- (13) Salesmanship in auditing - selling ourselves to management.

There were also six plenary sessions at which addresses were given as follows:

- (a) 'Auditors - are you ready for change?' by Dr Noah Langdale, President, Georgia State University, Atlanta.
- (b) 'Dynamic auditing in a changing world', by Mr Duane E. Wilson (International President, Institute of Internal Auditors), Standard Oil Co (Indiana), Chicago, Illinois.
- (c) 'The dynamic auditor - fact or fiction?' by Dr Michael H. Mescon, Professor of Human Relations, Georgia State University, Atlanta, Georgia.
- (d) 'The auditor - amateur or professional?' by Dr Herb True, writer and lecturer, the True-Klemf Organization, South Bend, Indiana.
- (e) 'Ear to ground auditing - dynamic tool to management', by Mr Norman Jaspan, President, Jaspan Associates Inc., New York.

- (f) 'Upon attaining excellence in auditing', by Dr Kenneth McFarland, guest lecturer, General Motors Corporation, and consultant to several major corporations, Topeka, Kansas.

Report of plenary sessions

Dr Langdale said that the two main dangers to progress were external obsolescence (which was inevitable) and internal indifference (which was controllable). The major reasons for failure of the individual were setting the wrong goals, working on wrong facts by wrong methods, and through wrong motives, and the breakdown of the physical and emotional side of individuals.

He contended that the greatest problem of the age was the solving of the 'human equation, e.g., the gap between the generations, the gap between male and female, and the gap between employer and employee.

Mr Duane E. Wilson, in dealing with the theme of the conference chosen by him at the beginning of his presidential year, said that internal audit was an integral part of the organization and shared in the advances made by the organization by assessing the effectiveness of communication, co-ordination, organizational controls, selection of employees, use of personnel including training, interpretation and implementation of policies, by evaluating divergencies from policies and by keeping management informed of the effectiveness of policies.

The dynamic auditor was a man of knowledge (in management services, in human environment, and in social economic, and political factors), a man of action (through positive thinking and his influence on the environment), and a man of ideas (because the only true progress was innovation - good judgement of the current position alone was not enough).

Dr Mescon thought that the task of management was to recognize goals and objectives, and then to establish a hierarchy of priorities. The greatest failure was in the recognition and the rewarding of individuals as human beings. The great American hoax today was that work was so complex that very long periods of education and many degrees were necessary - this was not so.

Dr True distinguished between the amateur and the professional. He described the amateur (anyone that played by ear) as one who didn't study, talked about a future that was already here, tackled everything the hard way, and made the big mistakes. On the other hand, the professional set new objectives and directed effort, measured results, achieved objectives, and earned respect. He made decisions, set standards, did not merely meet them, and earned the right to ask people to act.

Mr Norman Jaspan considered that the average defaulter was not basically a criminal but an opportunist. The aim should be to get people to unburden their souls and clear their consciences. Dishonesty was a by-product of poor management, but procedures and controls that could not be enforced were dangerous.

At the concluding session the incoming President, Mr Jack Mosher, chief internal auditor of Lockheed Missiles & Space Co, San Francisco, California, announced that the theme for 1970-71 would be 'Progress demands effective communication'.

Awards for meritorious service

At the final luncheon, the names of the Bradford Cadmus Memorial Award winners for 1969-70 were announced. These were Mr J. O. Davies, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., who recently retired as chief internal auditor of the National Coal Board, and has been a member of the Institute of Internal Auditors for 21 years, and Mr Heinz J. Hintze, deputy chief internal auditor of Unilever Ltd.

Mr Davies had played a prominent part in developing internal auditing in the United Kingdom, especially in the formation of the provincial chapters, and has been Director at Large of the Institute in western Europe for some years. Mr Hintze had similarly been active among chapters in Scandinavia and subsequently the Paris Chapter.

The award was established in 1965 to honour the memory of Mr Bradford Cadmus who died in December 1964, and who from 1947 to 1962 was the first managing director of the Institute of Internal Auditors. The award is given annually for outstanding contributions in either the past or present, in research, educational work, or development in the field of internal auditing. It is the first time that this award has been made to persons outside the USA. Mr Hintze was unable to be present and will receive the award later in the year in Scandinavia. Mr Davies attended the Atlanta Conference with Mrs Davies, and received his award in person.

1974 conference in London

At the business meeting held after the conclusion of the conference, a ballot took place to decide the venue of the International Conference in 1974. A bid from the London Chapter was presented by Mr Frank J. Rigg, F.C.A., chief internal auditor of Taylor Woodrow Services Ltd, the newly-elected President of the Chapter. Other contenders were the Cleveland and Dallas Chapters, but the ballot showed an overwhelming majority for London.

This will be the first time the International Conference has been held outside the North American continent.

The London Chapter has announced that the 1974 International Conference will be held at Grosvenor House, Park Lane, London, from July 7th to 10th, 1974. The Chapter will also be hosts for the twelfth West European Regional Conference to be held at Grosvenor House from April 28th to 30th, 1971.

Re-admissions to Membership

Two applications under clause 23 of the supplemental Royal Charter were refused.

It was reported to the Council that the following re-admissions, made at the Council meetings on May 12th and June 3rd, subject to payment of the amounts required, had become effective:

Freeman, Leonard Francis, 10 Armour Place, Linwood, Renfrewshire.

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at hearings held on 19th May 1970

1. A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council:

That Michael Robert Smith a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has been adjudged bankrupt within the meaning of clause 21 (4) of the Supplemental Royal Charter

In that he on 19th March 1970 was adjudged bankrupt.

Finding

The Committee found that the formal complaint against Michael Robert Smith, F.C.A., had been proved.

Decision

The Committee ordered that Michael Robert Smith, F.C.A., of 9 Northumberland Street, Morecambe, Lancashire, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

2. A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the

Disciplinary Committee of the Council:

That Alfred Evelyn Spencer a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 (3) of the Supplemental Royal Charter

In that he having on 16th December 1969 been reprimanded by the Disciplinary Committee for having failed without good cause to reply to or take action upon a letter dated 9th July 1969 addressed to him in his professional capacity by a certain person, failed, despite the reprimand, to communicate with that person.

Finding

The Committee found that the formal complaint against Alfred Evelyn Spencer, F.C.A., had been proved.

Decision

The Committee ordered that Alfred Evelyn Spencer, F.C.A., of 37 Friar Lane, Leicester, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

3. A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council:

That a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 (3) of the Supplemental Royal Charter

In that he without due cause failed to reply to a letter addressed to him on 2nd March 1970 by the Institute.

Finding

The Committee found that the formal complaint had been proved.

Decision

The Committee ordered that the member be admonished but the Committee considered that there existed special circumstances justifying the omission of his name from the publication of the Finding and Decision.

Student Roundabout

HULL INVESTMENT GAME

THE Chartered Accountants' Students' Society of Kingston upon Hull is now reaching the third decision day of its current investment game, which takes place over a period of six months. The game has stimulated a considerable amount of friendly rivalry among local firms from which the 19 teams are drawn.

Each team has a starting capital of £10,000 which may be invested in not less than five, and not more than ten, stocks. In addition, a further £1,000 is available for each decision following the initial decision. Thus, the total cash available over the period is £15,000. The full amount of the initial fund does not have to be invested, although the minimum holding in any one investment is £500 - the maximum holding is £3,000.

On the last Friday of each month each team completes a decision form which explains the purchases and sales made and also summarizes the total value of the fund held. All prices are taken from The Financial Times on the decision day. The team which attains the greatest capital appreciation during the game is the winner. At present, the leading team is showing a loss of just over £600!

A meeting of the Joint Students' Societies Working Party was held in the common room of the Chartered Accountants' Society of London on July 2nd. Among the subjects discussed were: services available to students, membership of student district societies and branches, and 'integration' information for students. Facing camera: Miss K. M. Davidson, B.A., Education Officer, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, Mr John Scott-Baird, A.C.A., A.C.I.S., Chairman of the Working Party, and Mr Derek du Pré, Secretary.

HULL'S ANNUAL MEETING

MEMBERS of The Chartered Accountants' Students' Society of Kingston upon Hull are reminded that the annual general meeting of the Society takes place on Tuesday next at 6.30 p.m. at the Queens Hotel, Hull. It is hoped that as many members as possible will attend the meeting and express their views on policy decisions for the Society's 1970-71 session.

THUNDER TROPHY

IN recent matches for the South Eastern Chartered Accountant Students' Society's Thunder Trophy the state of the positions in the league table is as follows:

	Played	Won	Lost	Points
Crawley	2	2	0	5
Hastings	1	1	0	2
Hove	2	1	1	2
Eastbourne	1	0	1	0
Horsham	2	0	2	0

Car Treasure Hunt

The Society's recent car treasure hunt, organized by the Society's Eastbourne Branch, was an immense success.

A total of 16 cars took part in the 'hunt' setting off at 7.30 p.m. at the Bishop Roundabout on the A22 Eastbourne to London Road, the last car getting home at 11.50 p.m. There was a booby prize for the last man home, but he was too late to receive it - who wants a can of beans at that time of night!

The party which followed, attended by some 75 article clerks and their guests, was also acclaimed as a great success and continued well into the small hours.

The Society's Crawley Branch are hoping to run an event along similar lines in the near future. Details will be announced.

BRADFORD'S SPORTS ACTIVITIES

IN very windy conditions, The Bradford and District Chartered Accountant Students' Society's annual golf competition was held at The Bradford Golf Club, Hawsworth on June 25th. Stephen N. Birkett, playing off a four handicap, returned an excellent net 74 to win the Kilby Challenge Cup. Roy Aspinall, the Society's treasurer, was runner-up.

Following the match, Mr G. D. Verity, B.COMM., F.C.A., a Vice-President of the Society, presented the trophy to the winner.

It was a very pleasant and enjoyable afternoon for all those who participated in the match, but the Society's Committee feels that if the competition is to be continued, more support must be forthcoming.

There is to be a visit to Bradford by the Liverpool Chartered Accountant Students' Association on August 5th, when it is hoped that cricket, golf, squash and tennis matches will be played. Members of the Society wishing to participate in these matches should contact the sports secretary, John Brearton, c/o Claridge, Turner & Co, Auburn House, 8 Upper Piccadilly, Bradford 1. Telephone Bradford 22166.

Forthcoming Dance

The Society is holding a dance at the Penny Farthing Club, Bradford, on Monday, September 28th. Admission will be at the extremely low price of four shillings and tickets are available from any committee member.

The existing agreement will accordingly cease to have effect in the United Kingdom from April 1971.

PATENT OFFICE IN 1969

The Comptroller-General's annual report on the work of the Patent Office in 1969 published last Thursday (HMSO, price 4s) reports intense international activity aimed in particular at achieving a measure of work-sharing and rationalization between national patent offices. It also describes the work done towards establishing a European Patent and the Patent Co-operation Treaty.

The report shows a continuing upward trend in the numbers of patent applications and complete specifications filed, the 1969 figures for both being all-time highs. Applications for Industrial Designs fell for the fourth consecutive year and, at the end of 1969, were 5.7 per cent less than the 1968 level. Trade mark applications received in the year increased to 17,139.

FIRM'S CENTENARY

The origins of Broads, Paterson & Co go back 100 years, when an entry was made in the City Rent Roll that H. E. Broad and Alfred Broad had begun to practise together in the City of London. They were joined in 1871 by John Paterson and from that date the firm practised as Broads, Paterson & Co.

Now, the firm is part of Arthur Young McClelland Moores & Co which came into being on May 1st, 1968, as the result of the merger of Arthur Young & Co; McClelland, Moores & Co; Broads, Paterson & Co, and Newton & Co. It is interesting to note that the originating firms of McClelland Moores, who can trace their history back for nearly 150 years, trained the original partners in Arthur Young & Co.

To celebrate this centenary year, the firm has declared Friday of this week a holiday for all staff in the London office, and has invited them with their guests to an afternoon's racing at Newbury. Guests are also coming from other offices both in the United Kingdom and from the Continent. The firm is sponsoring the 3 o'clock race - the Tony Murison Stakes, named after a late senior partner - and the Tony Murison Trophy will be presented to the owner of the winner. After racing, tea will be served in the firm's marquee, followed by an open-air cocktail party and a barbecue supper. There will then be dancing to Nat Temple's Band and Russ Henderson's Steel Drums in the New Stand to round off the evening.

Although during the nineteenth century the accountancy profession was mostly associated with bankruptcies, liquidations, and the consequences of financial failure, we understand that from its beginnings the firm of Broads, Paterson & Co was more concerned with auditing and financial work for companies. They were in fact the auditors of Chicago

Breweries Ltd, an English company formed in 1889 to acquire two breweries in Chicago, and sent staff from London to carry out the audit. R. S. Paterson, who became a partner in 1904, visited Chicago every year until the outbreak of the First World War and formed a working arrangement with J. P. McGregor, who became a partner in Arthur Young & Co in 1918. A joint firm, Arthur Young, Broads Paterson & Co, was formed in 1923 to conduct an accounting business in Continental Europe and to open an office in Paris.

BRITISH ACCOUNTANT'S APPOINTMENT AT UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS

Mr Kenneth S. Most, M.A.(FLA), LL.B.(LOND.), F.C.A., has graduated from the University of Florida with the degree of Ph.D.(Econs), and has been appointed Professor and Head of the Department of Accounting, College of Business Administration, Texas A & M University, Texas.

After gaining professional experience with an American firm on the Continent, Mr Most was awarded a P. D. Leake Research Fellowship at Manchester University. He then joined the staff of the Polytechnic School of Management Studies in London, becoming principal lecturer. In 1964 he was appointed Head of the School of Accountancy, Singapore University, for a two-year term, and thereafter he went to the University of Florida as a lecturer in accountancy and to read for his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees. He has been a contributor to The Accountant for a number of years.

There's more than one way of buying the wrong computer

It's easy enough to be blinded by a computer's technological skills. Its nanoseconds of speed. The abundance of its characters. Or the accompanying volumes of jargon.

Most computers you'll look at can all do pretty much the same things.

What ought to worry you is how the computer will fit into your business.

This depends on how well the company you buy it from understands your requirements. At NCR, we would want to know a lot about your business and the way you see it growing, before we talk about a particular computer.

So that we can give you not just a computer but a total business system. Which means the opportunity to be in total command of your business. With all the facts as you need them.

We know what we're talking about. We've been solving business efficiency problems for a very long time.

If you'd like a businesslike talk, drop us a line. We'll be interested in your business.

Long before you get interested in our computer. The NCR Century.

The text of this well-known and authoritative work has been reviewed and considerably extended to meet the changes in auditing philosophy and company law over the period since the last edition was published, without destroying the basic views on the subject which the original author held in so individual a way.

The requirements of the Companies Acts of 1948 and 1967 are fully discussed, and the need to pay particular attention to points of difficulty and controversy has not been ignored. Legal decisions are discussed and more fully reported than is usual in such works, and recent developments such as statistical sampling techniques, internal control questionnaires, flow-charting, etc., are reviewed. A new chapter has been added on auditors' working papers and the City code on takeovers is considered.

The 'Notes on Auditing' of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales are reproduced in full, and the recommendations of the Jenkins Committee relevant to auditors are quoted.

This new edition has been designed to meet present-day needs, while preserving the distinctive character of the work.

Career Opportunities for Young Accountants

£2,500-£3,000 + benefits

A leading international multi-factory company invites applications from young qualified Accountants who have gained some post-qualification experience in a large professional firm or within industry and who now wish to broaden their career.

Initially successful candidates will join the Central Audit Department, which, under main Board direction, is responsible for monitoring all control systems. New members will be expected to contribute to the effective running of this unit, undertaking operational and financial audits. Some local travel is involved and there are opportunities for short overseas assignments.

After a year or so it is envisaged that candidates will move into our financial analysis and planning operations, either at plant or divisional level. Thereafter, there are exceptional promotional prospects within the Company at its present stage of development for the highly motivated and talented individual.

The current vacancies are based in the Midlands, but we shall be pleased to hear from people interested in other locations as vacancies are likely to arise in other areas later in the year.

Please send full career details, specifying current salary and location preference.

(Ref. K7086/TA/Opportunities)

Replies will be forwarded direct, unopened, and in confidence to the client unless addressed to our Security Manager listing companies to which they may not be sent. They should include comprehensive career details, not refer to previous correspondence with P.A., quote the reference on the envelope and be sent to:

You have your qualification... now earn your laurels in Europe

In any of the major continental cities—celebrated for their beauty, their life, or their commerce—you can establish your career on the soundest of bases.

At the same time as you increase your stock of that intangible asset 'valuable experience', you will be improving your own capability to fulfil your ambitions as a Chartered Accountant.

The aim is for you to become leader of an audit team as quickly as possible. If you have the experience—you could start there straightaway.

You will carry out business-oriented audits of European subsidiaries of American and British companies as well as local concerns.

Modern American audit techniques are used, and we expect you'll find the variety of jobs—and the experience of a different way of life—worthwhile from the career-building point of view.

More immediate benefits of the big step abroad include an excellent salary, four weeks' holiday plus local statutory holidays, and assistance with language tuition.

Your qualification alone will be sufficient to justify a meeting between you and C. J. Daintree, who will tell you more about the work and prospects in Europe.

Please write to him at Price Waterhouse & Co., 47 Avenue de l'Opéra 75 Paris 2, or telephone 073-63-34.

Taxation Specialist

An unusual opportunity arises from the setting up in London of a separate research and planning department for taxation and estate duty by an International firm of Chartered Accountants. This is the opportunity for a taxation specialist to show his ability in a stimulating office. It would particularly suit a barrister well versed in taxation. The salary will be high and commensurate with the ability of the man selected.

Please write with full details of experience and personal particulars to D. I. Main, Pannell Fitzpatrick & Co, Lee House, London Wall, London EC2.

TAX CONSULTANT CITY OF LONDON

The City Office of an International firm of Chartered Accountants is seeking a qualified taxation specialist of the highest calibre whose duties will include advising the partners on taxation aspects of major clients. Experience of international tax, mergers and flotations is essential. This position offers a real challenge, with commensurate opportunities to the successful applicant, and it is unlikely that anyone currently earning less than £6,000 p.a. would be suitable.

YOUNG CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

(Qualified or Finalists)

Arthur Andersen was a prominent figure in updating accounting thought and service. As a result, the organization that bears his name has expanded rapidly and now enjoys a world-wide reputation for progressive leadership and employee training.

Its London office now needs young and ambitious businessmen (in their early 20's) to join their Audit and Taxation divisions.

Training: A second to none internal programme. This year, the introductory three-week course is being held near Paris.

Prospects: You'll have early responsibility and should reach manager status after 3 years, when you'll be earning at least £3,750. Another 8 years and you may be offered a partnership—a large number of the partners are in their thirties.

Interested? Then write now to the firm for more detailed information, for the attention of: David Steele, St. Alphage House, 2, Fore Street, London, E.C.2.

Experts confidently predict the stock market will regain its buoyancy one day.

Trouble is, they never name the day.

Or even the year.

While you're waiting, wouldn't it be sensible to have at least some of your money in the Abbey National?

We realise we are not as exciting as the stock market.

We just hand out a steady old 5% come slump, defeat in Mexico or any other imaginable disaster.

Still, our five per cent is better than some five per cents. Because we pay the income tax due on it.

And it's really equivalent to 8½%, if you pay tax at the standard rate.

All this presupposes you want to keep your capital liquid.

If you don't, you can earn a lot more.

Our S.A.Y.E. scheme, for example, gives far more handsome rates completely free of all income tax, surtax and capital gains tax.

And you can earn nearly 12% with our insurance linked Bounty Bonds.

Let's face it, though, you'll never make a killing with the Abbey National.

But you'll never wish you were dead, either.

manual of computer systems

Edited by
BRIAN A. MAYNARD
M.A., F.C.A., A.C.W.A.

An essential aid in a field of national importance. An authoritative work of reference on computers used for data processing in the United Kingdom, it is a valuable time-saver to all concerned with obtaining accurate basic information for unbiased decisions about computer systems – speeding up decisions, reducing the chances of wrong ones and saving the time of key staff of both potential users and the computer manufacturers.

There is, therefore, no longer any reason for wasting time and money in order to obtain factual background information which is now available at a fraction of the cost of obtaining it for oneself.

AN ESSENTIAL WORK OF REFERENCE COMBINED WITH A QUARTERLY UP-DATING SERVICE

As a result of an increase in the number of subscribers, we are pleased to announce that it is now possible to provide a greatly improved up-dating service for the same annual subscription. In future, all amendments will be in the form of new sheets so that manual alterations will not be necessary. In addition to new systems, it is also envisaged that the descriptions of each of four main systems will be completely reprinted at least once a year to incorporate in the main body of the text such new features as may appear during the year.

The features of each system are analysed in detail

HAD A TIRING DAY AT THE MUSEUM?

How long does it take your office to make out an invoice?

Allowing for the inevitable errors to be corrected of course. And the errors your customers will want corrected before they pay up.

No wonder you're so tired. Before even getting down to do the business you're in business to do.

We think it's a tragedy that so many offices are marking time, filling in time, when all this and more could be done at electronic speed.

With an NCR 446 Invoicing Computer.

A desk-size machine easier to operate than a typewriter. Purpose-built for instant electronic invoicing. At low cost.

Names and addresses, descriptions and prices are all entered automatically, all right first time, every time.

Extensions and discounts, tax and totals are all calculated electronically. In a fraction of the time it usually takes.

And that's not all. Our Invoicing Computer can also talk the language of computers. And talk it to an NCR Computer at your nearest NCR Data Centre.

To give you the real benefits of big-time computing. Prompt statements. Complete credit control. Detailed sales analysis and stock control.

Programming, training of your staff, installation and maintenance for the first year, are all free.

We think you ought to find out a bit more about our NCR 446 Invoicing Computer.

A tired businessman isn't much good to any business. Let alone yours.

Every accountant likes a bonus

A bonus can take many forms. It can be a taxi rushing round the corner with its sign ablaze when you're stuck in the pouring rain. It can be a new client who walks unheralded into your office for advice. A bonus can be an unexpected mini-skirt in the general office. Or a bright insurance clerk on the other end of the line who sounds interested in your problems and not just appalled at the amount of work you're giving him.

At the UKP we help where we can. We have no special access to taxis. And, alas, no monopoly of mini-skirts. Our staff is always ready and willing to help unravel problems at the drop of a hat. But when we talk about bonuses, we mean our triennial compound bonuses. And for anyone's money, our new High Yielder investment policy shows what can be done with a really good compound bonus.

Like ours.

The Last Word

LAST Saturday's special meeting of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants approved the draft integration agreement by 4,727 votes to 1,166 – a majority of a little over 80 per cent. This, in two respects, is a significant result. First, the declared reluctance of the ICWA Council to endorse the proposals has not, in the event, deterred members from giving a very clear expression of opinion. Secondly, the ICWA poll is the first on the definitive resolution in which over 50 per cent of the total membership has recorded its vote.

If we accept that the unanimous approval of the proposals on June 24th by a show of hands at the meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland is an augury for the outcome of their poll, then the whole future of the profession within these islands rests with the outcome of the English Institute's poll on August 14th. It is right that this should be so.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has the longest history of any organized body of accountants, other than the three local societies which amalgamated to form The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland in 1951; it has by far the largest membership of any of the participating bodies; it is also the body which may have to assimilate the great majority of the present membership of three other societies, and whose qualification stands to suffer if the often-voiced fears of 'dilution' are established as fact in the public mind. With so much at stake, it appears to us doubly fortunate that the timing of the various meetings has given the last word to Moorgate Place, and that the scheme has not been prematurely torpedoed on a minority vote of a smaller body.

On other pages in this issue there is a summary of the English Institute's proceedings at the Royal Albert Hall on June 24th, and a full transcript of that meeting is being distributed to all members of the Institute this week. Whilst having some sympathy for the view that 'the mind can only absorb what the seat will endure', we cannot but deplore the action of those members who succeeded in 'guillotining' the debate and thus prevented several others from being heard. It will be seen from the report and transcript that few speeches were remarkable for their brevity: but in view of the importance of the matter and the expressed desire for the transcript to reflect all shades of opinion, some further indulgence would not have come amiss. The charge of 'filibustering' – which imputes a deliberate waste of time – was unworthy and those who allowed the blade to fall for their own comfort or convenience have done their fellows a disservice.

Even in its truncated form the debate, as recorded, should be read with great care by every member of the Institute. One hears irreverent remarks about 'more Institute paper', and more earnest complaints about the lack of time for reading: but any rational assessment of priorities must accord a high place to consideration of a scheme which will affect the whole structure of the profession for the foreseeable future. To dismiss the problem, or to delegate it mentally to one's district society committee or to the Council, is to incur a fearful responsibility.

Therefore, risking tedium, we once again exhort all members of the Institute to read the transcript; read the scheme proposals; read, if time permits, the controversy as it has been developed in our correspondence columns. Consider these words with care. And VOTE.

Further Thoughts on Hedley Byrne

THE summer course papers of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales are intended, by established usage, to stimulate thought and to provoke discussion rather than to lay down authoritative guidance. We reproduce elsewhere the first part of 'Smaller audits – bigger problems?' presented by Mr K. J. Sharp, T.D., M.A., F.C.A., at Oxford last week-end; and whilst Mr Sharp is rightly at pains to emphasize that this paper does not necessarily represent the views of the Institute's Council, or even of the particular subcommittee of which he happens to be chairman, it is certainly a powerful disincentive to complacency in the approach to small company audits.

In particular, Mr Sharp's juxtaposition of section 2 of the Companies Act 1967 with the Hedley Byrne decision¹ raises considerations which may not hitherto have been examined in detail, and which merit more than a passing thought – particularly by the large number of practitioners who number previously exempt private companies among their clients. Abolition of the privileges formerly enjoyed by these companies has made it obligatory for them to file audited accounts with the Registrar of Companies in support of each year's annual return, and thus the accounts are available for inspection by anyone wishing to know more about the company – such as, for example, prospective creditors.

According to the Institute's statement on 'Accountants' liability to third parties' (Members' Handbook, V 8), counsel has advised that an accountant would incur liability to his client's creditors (assuming his report or statement to have been negligent in the first place) only if he knew or ought to have known at the time of preparing the document that it was required for the purpose of being shown to bankers or others in order to obtain credit. There is also persuasive authority from the United States in the case of Ultramares Corporation v. Touche (255 NY 170) in which the Court felt that it would be wrong to expose auditors to a potential liability 'in an indeterminate amount for an indefinite time to an indeterminate class' – but plainly, and indeed quite reasonably, Mr Sharp still has his doubts.

He suggests that counsel's advice upon the point 'may have been a little over-sanguine'; and he might with justice have added that this opinion was taken two years before the Companies Act 1967 became law. This is in our own view a material consideration: any prudent or knowledgeable man of business would clearly recognize the likelihood of potential creditors – particularly for a large amount or a prospective long-term commitment – inspecting the company's file beforehand, and it would be difficult for auditors to argue that they had no reason to anticipate such an occurrence.

Nevertheless, Mr Sharp and his readers may find some consolation in another recent publication from Chartered Accountants' Hall, Financial and Accounting Responsibilities of Directors, which formed the subject of a leading article in our July 2nd issue. An auditor, as such, is not responsible for the preparation of accounts (though, to be sure, in dealing with the affairs of the smaller client the respective functions of auditor and accountant have sometimes been confused); the statutory responsibility for producing accounts which give a true and fair view, and which disclose the information required by the Companies Acts, rests squarely upon the company's directors.

A director's defence that he had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that a competent and reliable person (who may be either an independent professional accountant or an employee) was charged with securing compliance with the statutory requirements may suffice to excuse a charge of default under the Companies Acts, but is not necessarily relevant to a Hedley Byrne claim. The responsibilities of directors cannot be wholly discharged by delegation and their overriding duty to act honestly, diligently and with reasonable skill and care applies as much to delegation as to anything else.

It is worth repeating that liability towards third parties under the rule in Hedley Byrne arises only in case of negligence, this being a prerequisite to any consideration of the use to which the relevant documents are or might reasonably have been put. If the negligence of directors should unhappily be compounded by the negligence of an auditor or accountant, one would not, of course, wish other shoulders to bear the professional man's burden. Equally, the profession need not be made the automatic and inevitable scapegoat for any lack of skill, foresight or business judgement in others. If Mr Sharp's hypothesis becomes a reality, then there should be more than one defendant.

Current Affairs

Revenue Policy on Close Companies

INLAND Revenue legislation is notoriously prone to unexpected side-effects in consequence of being widely drawn. The close company provisions were a particular example of this, and in consequence of representations by the accountancy profession and other interested parties, the Board of Inland Revenue have now indicated that certain definitions will in practice be more liberally interpreted.

Where a close company is a member of a trading group, the Board will have 'reasonable' regard, in arriving at the required standard of distributions, to the requirements and resources of other companies in the group. Directors' remuneration which has been disallowed for corporation tax purposes after March 31st, 1969, will not rank, subject to certain conditions, as a distribution. A company incurring Schedule A losses in consequence of rent control will be regarded as a 'property investment company' provided that the value of its assets invested in real property exceeds the value of its other investments.

'Sympathetic consideration' will be given in certain other areas of potential hardship. The full text of the Inland Revenue announcement is reproduced on another page.

Circulation of Members' Resolutions

THE reform of company law in 1947 included the introduction of what is now section 140 of the Companies Act 1948. It imposes a duty on a company, on the requisition, in writing, of a certain proportion of the members

'(a) to give to members of the company entitled to receive notice of the next annual general meeting notice of any resolution which may properly be moved and is intended to be moved at that meeting;

'(b) to circulate to members entitled to have notice of any general meeting sent to them any statement of not more than 1,000 words with respect to the matter referred to in any proposed resolution or the business to be dealt with at that meeting.'

In the event of any default in complying with the section, every officer of the company in default is liable to a fine not exceeding £500. On July 6th, the hearing was commenced at Marlborough Street of what was said to be the first prosecution under section 140. It was brought by Mr Bowes Egan and other shareholders against the secretary, Donald Henry MacKeith, and the directors, the Earl of Dartmouth, Alan Cochrane Guthrie and Walter Hans Salomon. Counsel for the defence told the magistrate that it was admitted that request was made for certain resolutions to be circulated before the annual meeting. The point at issue was whether the directors had been correctly advised by leading counsel that the resolutions could not properly be moved.

Counsel for the prosecution said it was alleged that at the material time the share price of Westminster Trust Holdings was about 14s. In April 1969 a transaction was effected by the directors whereby the company purchased Thomas C. Stewart Ltd, contractors, through another company, Fashion and General Investments. The purchase consideration was £400,000 nominal of convertible loan stock and up to £100,000 cash depending on the 1968-69 results of the Stewart company, provided that the loan stock could be converted into ordinary shares of the Westminster company at 8s 6d per share and that these shares would not be quoted.

The transaction caused disquiet to Mr Bowes Egan and other shareholders who were concerned that such a large amount should have been paid for a company which did not appear on the face of it to be worth it. The suspicion was that Fashion and General Investments had very substantial links with Westminster Holdings and that the transaction might syphon off a substantial proportion of Westminster Trust assets into another company.

In cross-examination Mr Egan agreed that he had received a full explanation to each question he had put at the annual meeting but he said that the purpose of section 140 was to give shareholders time in which to understand what was being done. He agreed that the chairman had said the questions and answers would be printed and circulated to every shareholder, but that was done only in the face of some determined questioning. The hearing was adjourned until September 2nd.

Britain Well Prepared for Decimal Change-over

FIRM orders have now been placed for the replacement or conversion of about 80 per cent of cash registers, about 70 per cent of accounting machines, more than 60 per cent of price computing scales, and about half of the adding machines which will be affected by the change to decimal currency on February 15th, 1971, according to the third annual report of the Decimal Currency Board published last Thursday (HMSO, price 6s 6d).

The figures in the report are based on information about orders supplied to the Board by machine companies. The Board say that there is no room for complacency, as much remains to be done, particularly on cash registers and scales in the smaller shops. In general, however, the report concludes that 'In the United Kingdom, more preparatory work has been done on the change-over of machines than in any other country which has recently changed its currency system'.

Of the actual work of business machine conversion, a good deal has been completed already on cash registers (about 50 per cent), accounting and adding machines (about 35 per cent), and on price-computing scales. These categories together make up three-quarters of all the business machines which need to be converted to decimal working.

Reporting generally on 1969-70, the Board say that the first two stages of their decimalization strategy – concentration, firstly, on management, and, secondly, on retailers and cash handlers – are now almost complete. The final stage, concentration on the general public, is now close at hand.

Moves in Irish Banks' Dispute

FOLLOWING meetings at the Labour Court, and at the instigation of the Chairman of the Irish Banks' Joint Industrial Council, proposals incorporating a 17 per cent pay increase have been made to bank employees who ceased work on May 1st. The Irish Bank Officials' Association is taking a ballot among its members on the proposals, but in a covering letter it declares the offer to be too low; nor is it happy about the length of the proposed new agreement or the proposed dates for implementation.

The offer consists of a 9 per cent increase from the date of return to work, with a minimum of £100; and a further 8 per cent from April 1st, 1971, with a minimum of £60; the agreement to run until March 31st, 1972. Other fringe benefits include a £40 increase at each point of the basic scale and a reduction of the incremental scale for new entrants from seven to six years. A 'mobility allowance' of £40 in the first year, decreasing to £20 in the sixth, is suggested in order to meet the old grievance of the high cost of 'digs' for juniors, but it seems to have little relationship to reality.

There is to be no retrospective pay before July 1st, the date the old agreement terminated, and no compensation is offered for the 25 per cent salary cut imposed when the officials restricted their working hours to 4 p.m. from March 2nd. However, it is proposed that all employees of more than 12 years' service would be promoted to senior officials' scale, and overtime by managers – not previously remunerated – would be paid for at a rate of £2 per hour for a maximum of eight weeks.

The new pay scale, after the second increase, would be £2,505 (previously £2,108) for senior officials; £1,927 (£1,612) for promoted women; £2,680 (£2,258) for assistant managers; and £2,934 (£2,476) for managers.

In view of the unfavourable IBOA response, an early return to work seems highly unlikely. Feeling in Dublin a month ago was that the banks could remain closed until the end of August and at the present rate of progress this may well prove to be right. But at any rate contact between the two sides has now been resumed.

British Computer Society's Entry Regulations

ALTHOUGH the Council of the British Computer Society considers that all entrants should pass a two-part examination (or be exempted by virtue of having passed other approved examinations), it nevertheless recognizes that there are a number of qualified persons of considerable experience who have not, so far, joined the Society for one reason or another. It would be invidious and impractical, says the Society, to require such persons to take its examinations should they wish to join – particularly if the benefit of their advice, knowledge, and experience is unquestionable.

It has therefore been proposed that until 1975 regulations should be relaxed to allow entry without examination for those who can show that they have at least 10 years' experience of electronic data processing, whether it be as an accountant, engineer, or mathematician. The Council of the Society are also seeking powers to admit applicants who submit a dissertation of outstanding merit on an appropriate EDP topic.

There will thus be three criteria for the admission of applicants to membership: experience, the submission of a thesis, or examination, and as the Council is anxious to have a syllabus continually relevant to prevailing conditions, there will be an initial one-day conference on syllabus content. To be opened by Mr A. d'Agapeyeff, A.C.A., F.B.C.S., Deputy President of the Society, the conference will be held at Imperial College, London, on July 21st. As the Council wishes to ascertain the views of those organizations using the Society's examinations as part of their own training programmes for computer personnel, it is proposed to hold further seminars at suitable intervals. Information on these may be obtained from the BCS Conference Department, 29 Portland Place, London W1.

THIS IS MY LIFE

The New Intake

by An Industrious Accountant

THE four of them sat stretched in deck-chairs in the garden, discussed their future prospects of money-making. They had the look of the potent, grave and reverend signors of Venice, discussing on the Rialto the fortunes of their storm-tossed afgoses. It was hard to remember them two years ago debating with painful worry the prospects of careers in accountancy.

Now, two years of university life lay behind them and their second-year exams had been passed successfully. The partnership section had been stiff – too many trick questions – they said. I commented with careful nonchalance that in my time Stevens' Mercantile Law had covered the subject tolerably well, but they put me in my place immediately. Stevens' was good, yes, but of course they now had Charlesworth as well, not to mention Smith and Keenan.

The spectacled youth said crushingly that it was impossible to learn law from books alone; direct contact with the lecturer's reasoning was essential.

They had a sort of students' committee that found jobs abroad for them during vacation time, said the stout boy, who intended to work in Canada. I quoted my second brother – a doctor in Toronto – who'd told me that jobs there were very scarce. A depression, rising unemployment figures, and firms keeping the jobs for their own national students – who had to pay their own way through college. . . . Not to worry, they told me; their committee would fix things for them.

A couple of their friends proposed to go hop-picking in Kent (there were still a few gardens, it seemed, not yet mechanized), and somebody else was booked for a vegetable-canning factory where the late shifts worked long hours for high pay. My wife, catching the last remark as she brought out tea, warned them solicitously about the dire effects of overwork (especially with the inferior food they'd get in digs) on growing boys. They needed rest and sleep and building-up after their term's slogging, she declared, remembering how often she'd brought them coffee and sandwiches late at night as they clustered round our big dining-room table, white with tension and brows wrinkled with concentration.

They laughed gaily at that one, boisterously flexing their muscles. They were tough, they said, they could take it – look at their sideburns! There were hotel jobs going where student waiters could pick up enormous sums in tips; the summer season lounge-bars were appealing for staff. My son himself was starting with a tourist development project where, so far as I could judge, he was likely to be clerk, cashier, banker, gigolo and compère at one and the same time. The world was their oyster, said the spectacled ad grandiloquently; if they were bored they'd quit and go elsewhere.

The hairy boy commenced a tale about his adventure with a barmaid in Jersey last year, but they told him quickly to shut up . . . lest he shock the Old Man!

It wasn't just the money, explained the quietest member of the party. There was this youth club he knew, which wanted volunteers for rehabilitation work at a standing camp for ex-Borstal types now on probation. Board and accommodation were provided but no wages; he rather fancied the idea. Wider horizons, and paying something back for all one had got too easily at home; a sort of balance-the-books operation in a way.

All in all, the new intake looks like something the profession should be proud of some day.

Summer Course at Oxford

THE Oxford Summer Course of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales assembled at Christ Church last Friday under a grey sky and an intermittent drizzle. This fortunately proved only a temporary annoyance, and Saturday's proceedings passed off in cloudless sunshine which tempted more than one group to sally forth with cushions and tankards on to the Peckwater lawn.

The first speaker, on Friday evening, was the Rt Hon. Lord Justice Buckley, formerly President of the Restrictive Practices Court and now a Lord Justice of Appeal. Taking as his subject 'The position of the shareholder', he suggested that the small shareholder (as distinct from the big institutional investor) in practice took very little notice of communications from the company.

On Saturday, Mr K. J. Sharp, T.D., M.A., F.C.A., presented his paper on 'Smaller audits - bigger problems?' of which the first instalment is reproduced elsewhere in this issue. He argued that official recommendations should bear some relation to life as it is lived, whereas the present 'U' section of the Members' Handbook contained perhaps ten scattered paragraphs directly addressed to the smaller audit.

There was no distinction in law between the small company and the industrial giant but, in fact, the former required an entirely different philosophy and set of ground rules from the latter. He believed that to attempt to deal with large and small companies on an equal footing could lead to the emergence of a dual standard of auditing, if the same words were to be credited in other circumstances with a different meaning. The auditor's own report should be true and fair.

The President of the Institute, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., right, in conversation with the Institute's Deputy Secretary, Mr J. P. Hough, F.C.A.

Mr Sharp recognized that, if his views should be accepted, some clients were likely to react to the auditor's new approach to his responsibilities, and unless fully persuaded of the need for it would take their work elsewhere. In this regard he made particular reference to paragraphs 5.5 and 5.6 of his paper, and put the case for a disciplinary 'back-stop' in such cases. It could not, of course, be said that no member should accept the client, where the transfer had been prompted by the previous auditor's insistence upon a certain procedure; but the new auditor should be prepared to satisfy the Investigation Committee, if necessary, that his acceptance of the client was not in the circumstances improper.

He also distinguished the type of 'negative assurance' quoted in paragraph 6.6 of his paper, given after all appropriate procedures had been carried out, from qualifications of a kind indicating that the auditor had abdicated or delegated his responsibility for particular items.

One of the most entertaining addresses to be delivered at a summer course for several years came from Mr Louis M. Kessler, C.P.A., President of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants. Announced to speak on 'Problems confronting the accounting profession in the USA', Mr Kessler gave priority to the elimination of needless variations in standards of financial reporting. He also dealt with various other areas of difficulty in terms which delighted his audience but were plainly not intended for verbatim report.

Mr John Diamond's indisposition enabled Mr C. I. Ball, F.C.A., to present his paper - 'What does the merchant banker expect from the accountant?' - on the Sunday morning, thus leaving members free to employ another fine afternoon in sport or private study. In his remarks, Mr Ball made it clear that he was speaking as a merchant banker and not as an accountant: the fact that he was also a member of the Institute was in itself coincidental, although a number of chartered accountants are directors of merchant banks.

What is a merchant bank?

The nature of a merchant bank's functions was sometimes misunderstood. Although apparently expected to provide full range of financial services and money on all occasions, merchant bankers were not lenders of last resort. It sometimes surprised clients that merchant bankers charged fees for their services, and in this respect Mr Ball contrasted the merchant banker who charged only if successful, with the practitioner who charged for all his time. (It should be recorded that some members of the course plainly considered this a contentious philosophy.)

An investigation undertaken on behalf of a merchant bank by independent accountants was not to be regarded as an adverse reflection on the standards of the existing auditor, nor did it necessarily presage the loss of the audit. Accountants whose private-company clients were interested in 'going public' should remember that the full course of events took time - from six months as a minimum to one or two years, depending upon the ramifications of a particular case.

Mr K. J. Foster, B.A., A.C.A., from Birmingham, left, with Mr N. F. Lewis, B.Sc., A.C.A., and Mr J. R. Hawksley, A.C.A., from London, and Mr O. Guest, F.C.A., from Manchester.

Situations in which the accountant and the merchant banker were most commonly brought into contact included 'rights' issues, debenture issues, acquisitions, and take-over bids. Directors were sometimes criticized for over-optimistic profit forecasts in resisting a bid, although if they were not themselves optimistic then the bid would presumably be accepted. The occasional exaggerated upheaval was, in fact, only a small proportion of the total number of mergers which took place. In conclusion, he urged accountants to be meticulous in ensuring that records of stock-taking, cash flow, and profit forecasts were maintained and retained. All too often it was alleged that the stock records for any earlier years had 'disappeared' – if, indeed, they had ever existed – and such an omission could seriously prejudice the course of a public flotation or an acquisition.

Value added tax

On Monday morning, Mr T. A. Kennedy, B.A., of the National Economic Development Office, presented his paper on 'Value added tax'. Describing the paper as 'a simple statement of political arithmetic', he alluded to the necessity of considering the institutional and revenue factors involved. VAT had recently become a subject of party-political controversy, and the development of such a tax on the continental model could be one element in any negotiations for Britain's entry to the Common Market.

Unlike other taxes, which were a necessary evil, VAT was claimed to possess positive virtues in supporting the economy and in maintaining the balance of payments. Mr Kennedy here remarked, humorously but with a grain of truth, that taxes falling on other people are always better than taxes falling on oneself, and that taxes which do not exist are better than those which do.

The national fiscal system consists of a number of interrelated and interdependent parts, so that to examine one device in isolation could be misleading, and the introduction of one new element might produce secondary effects elsewhere. Introduction of VAT would be a tax 'switching' operation, as an alternative to other taxes. It should also be remembered that taxes had a dual objective, not only to meet Government expenditure but also to achieve various political or social objectives: the political alternatives in such a case could be very diverse.

It would be wrong to imagine VAT as a 'magic' tax or a subsidy: it was a tax, by instalments, on final domestic consumer expenditure. In this respect it was similar to purchase tax and selective employment tax and indeed many of its advantages and disadvantages were common to other taxes.

The principal advantages claimed for VAT were that it was a broadly based ad valorem duty, covering all goods and services not specifically exempted, and falling on consumption. It would be rebatable on exports. Unlike SET, there would be no direct overspill into industrial costs. The broader the base upon which the tax was levied, the lower would be the rate; and adjustment of the rate would not result in relative price distortions.

On the other hand, the introduction of VAT would inevitably mean a loss of selectivity, in using taxes as an element of policy to stimulate or to restrain certain activities. There was also the administrative problem of documenting and recording all transactions, which would be burdensome on small businesses and particularly difficult where transactions were predominantly for cash.

The problem of VAT was essentially a political choice of 'mixes'. The tax could be used as an alternative to purchase tax and SET in restricting the indirect tax system, or to shift the burden from direct to indirect taxation.

Social activities

Apart from the formal papers, many members – particularly those who have attended previous courses – rely on these annual gatherings as a valuable opportunity to meet and to discuss problems of mutual interest. For this reason, some would have preferred to spread the programme over five rather than four days. However, the traditional golf competition was included and was won by Mr T. P. Hawker, F.C.A., of Walsall, whilst the arm-chair golfers were able to follow the Open championship at St Andrew's through the medium of a television set in the Junior Common Room. Chartered accountants, of course, take their golf very seriously, and it is rumoured that one member nearly found himself, some years ago, before the Investigation Committee for competing from the wrong handicap.

At the close of the course, a presentation was made by members to Mr D. P. Hubbard, B.A., of the Institute staff, in recognition of his services to summer courses over the past fourteen years. Peter Hubbard's friendly personality, his capacity for hard work and his meticulous attention to detail have endeared him to all regular course-goers, and this token of their appreciation was a most happy thought which plainly surprised and delighted the recipient.

Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., President of the Institute, presided with his customary affability and aplomb over the Guest Night dinner, and proposed the toast of 'The University and Christ Church', to which Mr E. T. Williams, C.B., C.B.E., D.S.O., D.L., Pro-Vice-Chancellor of the University, replied. The toast of 'Our Guests' was proposed by Mr W. G. Medlam, F.C.A., Vice-Chairman of the Summer Courses Subcommittee, and the response given by Mr H. F. R. Catherwood, M.A., F.C.A., Director-General of the National Economic Development Office. Afterwards, the guests were entertained in traditional style, and a good time was had by all.

Integration of the Profession

Transcript of Albert Hall Meeting Now Released

THE promised transcript of last month's special meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has been sent to members this week. The meeting was held at the Royal Albert Hall in order that members could consider and debate the formal resolution implementing the draft Integration Agreement with the five other accountancy bodies under the 'future plans' scheme.

As this resolution involves changes to the Institute's Charter and by-laws, a poll is obligatory under the existing by-law 100 (a), whether formally demanded or not. The President, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., who proposed the resolution, announced that such a poll would be taken at the offices of Messrs Myers, Davies & Co on August 14th.

Opposition to the resolution was led by Mr H. T. Nicholson, F.C.A. He stated that, contrary to the impression given in an Institute Newsletter recently, the proposals were not unanimously supported by district society committees or by the Council. Several members of Council and no less than four Past Presidents were known to be opposed to the scheme, and contributions to the 'fighting fund' which he had launched jointly with Mr B. W. Sutherland had been received from Council and district society committee members.

According to Mr Nicholson, the scheme involved an unacceptable dilution of the high professional standards of the Institute, and some 25,000 persons who had neither served articles nor passed the Institute examinations were to be admitted immediately to membership. This, he said, must lead to confusion in the minds of the public. There was a danger of the Council being dominated by the non-practising element, who would be unable to give sufficient time to Institute affairs and would therefore become 'increasingly reliant on a secretarial bureaucracy'. Finally, the scheme did nothing to prevent other bodies of accountants springing up and gaining influence, so that in another 20 or 30 years' time, standards would be further debased by another 'integration'. He called on all members to vote against the resolution.

No room for complacency

Sir Ronald Leach, C.B.E., F.C.A., from the platform, observed that the Institute could not live on its past reputation, 'much as it would be very comfortable to do so'. The strength of the profession lay in so many of its members holding distinguished positions in industry and commerce. Recent press criticism left no room for complacency in the profession, and if the scheme should fail it would be said that members were back in the category of those who wanted to stand still and were not prepared to face the future.

Mr T. D. G. Kelly, F.C.A., expressed himself as neither for nor against integration, but urged all members of the Institute to take an interest in the proceedings and to vote.

Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A., referred to 'a vocal minority' who were bitterly opposed to the scheme and who could block it by mustering a 34 per cent vote. He called on members not to permit 'the small undoing of the fulfilment of the dream of integration' to which a majority had shown themselves committed at last year's meeting, and to speak out loud and clear.

Mr B. W. Sutherland, F.C.A., supported Mr Nicholson. He did not say that chartered accountants were superior to members of other bodies involved in the scheme, but that they were different. Public practice, industrial and commercial financial management, and public finance formed not one profession but three.

He alleged that the Council had failed for nearly 20 years to recognize the effects of the Education Act 1944. The pre-war standard of five credits in the School Certificate examination was then adequate for university entrance, and much higher than five 'O' levels in GCE. Acceptance of the latter had lowered the Institute's entry standard. The proponents of the scheme were 'men in a hurry', who refused to recognize that sound development could only come by a process of steady evolution, and were obsessed with the idea of creating the biggest body of accountants in the world. They would find it nothing more than a huge façade which could not last.

Lack of forward thinking

Replying from the platform, Mr Stanley Dixon, M.A., F.C.A., took up Mr Hudson's reference to 'bitter opposition' and said that he was himself expressing whatever form of support might be the reverse of that. He criticized Mr Sutherland's speech for its lack of forward thinking and repudiated the ideas of 'different professions'. Practising and industrial accountants could not cut themselves off from one another. The independence of the practitioner was demanded by the business community and not forced upon it, and industrial members were often in the forefront of demands for improved professional standards.

Mr C. A. Lee, F.C.A., suggested that many of the 12,000 members whose proxies were cast for the April 1969 resolution were, in fact, overworked men who had accepted the 1968 proposals not on a careful consideration of their merits but because they were commended to them by the President and the Council. They had been glad to 'opt out' from considering the scheme in detail. The larger firms of chartered accountants, by virtue of their salary scales and training facilities, had no difficulty in attracting recruits; but the small practitioner, under integration, would be in a hopeless position, dependent upon staff who were not even interested in the 'second tier' examinations.

Mr D. B. Hughes, F.C.A., was 'appalled' by the suggestion that ethical standards might be lowered as a result of integration. He was confident that those who stood to become members if the scheme was approved would respect the honour that was conferred upon them, and that standards would remain as high as ever.

Mr H. O. H. Coulson, F.C.A., complained of the manner in which the scheme had been presented: it was, he said,

'a travesty of democratic consultation'. It involved a large number of amendments to the by-laws, each of which should in his view have been the subject of a separate resolution, and its presentation as a 'package deal' did not give the membership a fair chance to consider or debate it. He had found no support for the view that training in industry could adequately compare with training in a professional office, and he did not agree with those who were apparently seeking size for its own sake. As the Council was asking members to accept the scheme 'warts and all', it was not possible to separate the bad from the good in it, and he must therefore oppose it.

From the platform, Sir Ronald Leach replied that members could at least rely on the Council – whether its views were misguided or not – to put forward an honest prospectus. The proposals for training in industry were, in fact, evolved in consultation with the CBI and with the unanimous approval of a committee of industrialists who had studied the scheme in considerable detail.

A unified profession

Mr M. J. Baty, F.C.A., did not accept the allegations of dilution, or that service in industry was incompatible with the observance of a high standard of ethical conduct. He believed that the proposals fully met the Council's original terms of reference, and would fit members to provide the best possible service to their clients or employees. If the profession could not provide the requisite number of trained accountants, then industry itself would have to find alternative ways. He urged members to support the scheme so as to create a unified rather than a fragmented profession.

Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., a Past President, speaking from the floor of the hall, observed that several speakers had quoted from the 'Parker Report' on education and training. That report was appropriate at the time of its presentation [1961] but quotation out of context, both as to facts and as to time, was dangerous. The title of 'chartered accountant' would now be applied to persons of different backgrounds and different specializations from those of earlier years, but training in a professional office would continue to be 'absolutely right' for the practitioner. He wholeheartedly supported the scheme and urged all members to vote in favour of it.

Support for the scheme came also from Mr D. G. Richards, F.C.A., who said that sufficient imagination was needed to contemplate the next 40 years of the future 'in the most rapid era of change that the world has ever known'. Attempts to score debating points by quoting from the 1956 integration proposals or from the Parker Report were looking in the wrong direction.

Mr Gavin Miller, F.C.A., and Mr P. C. Elliott, F.C.A., likewise spoke in favour. On the other hand, Mr Ian Tosh, F.C.A., could not agree with the proposals, and Mr J. V. C. Butcher, A.C.A., declared that the scheme was 'based on muddled thinking and should be thrown out'.

So the debate continued. Mr A. C. Essex, F.C.A., pointed out that chartered accountants in industry were at present supervising students who were training, of necessity, for other bodies and that it was now less easy for a chartered accountant to move into industry than was the case, say, 20 years ago.

Another industrial member, Mr R. M. Smith, A.C.A., stressed the arduous nature of training under articles, which he described as 'present investment for future return', and said that the scheme would arbitrarily devalue the present worth of his investment. Mr P. Stuart McDonald, B.A., A.C.A., contended that the majority of present students supported the scheme, but Mr Nicholson was quick to point out that this estimate varied sharply from the 50-50 result of a poll which had been taken among students last year.

Mr D. E. Tanfield, F.C.A., was, as it happened, the final speaker from the floor, and summarized at some length the arguments against integration. It would not protect the independence of the practitioner. The sheer size of the new body would mean the delegation of powers to a 'faceless bureaucracy'. The original aims had almost disappeared under the pressures of opposition and compromise. The creation (by the IMTA) of an 'Institute of Public Finance' afforded a ready-made model for disintegration. There would inevitably be dilution of the 'chartered' qualification, and he described cost and works and certified accountants, with a few outstanding individual exceptions, as 'technicians'. Despite the tens of thousands of pounds spent by the Council in putting the scheme over, those opposed to it included Past Presidents, past and present members of the Council, secretariat and staff, and a large number of industrial and practising members. He asked all members to reject the scheme, but above all else to vote.

At this point a member secured the microphone and moved 'that the question now be put'. This being seconded and supported by a majority of those present, the President called for a show of hands on the main resolution. The result of this, as reported in The Accountant for June 25th, was:

For the resolution	121
Against	81

A poll will also be taken on a second resolution which (conditionally upon the first resolution being carried) seeks to make a number of changes in the Institute's subscription scales.

Opposition: View

ALSO sent to members of the English Institute this week was a letter, opposing the scheme, sponsored by Messrs H. T. Nicholson, F.C.A., and B. W. Sutherland, F.C.A. The cost of circulating this letter has been estimated at £2,000, of which approximately £1,600 has so far been subscribed or promised, the balance being guaranteed by the sponsors.

The authors of the letter contend that the arguments against integration have heavily outweighed those in favour. To introduce immediately, as 'chartered accountants', 25,000 people who have neither served articles nor passed the Institute examinations must bring about a dilution of standards, to the prejudice in particular of younger members who are not yet established in their careers.

The public will no longer be able to rely on the qualification of 'chartered accountant' as it is recognized today, without inquiring into how it was acquired. Independence of the practising member must inevitably be threatened and the profession would be 'ripe for nationalization' by a possible future Government. The Institute should instead concentrate on raising standards both of entry and of professional work, and thus establish a position 'still higher above the other accountancy bodies'.

Members who share the view that the scheme of integration would destroy the essential quality of the Institute are invited in the letter to appoint Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland as their proxies to oppose the resolution.

Smaller Audits – Bigger Problems?

by K. J. SHARP, T.D., M.A., F.C.A.

It is inevitable that when a member of the Council of the Institute presents a paper at a summer course, readers will tend to assume that the statements in the paper carry with them a degree of authoritative backing. When, in addition, the author of the paper is chairman of a sub-committee dealing with the subject-matter of the paper, the assumption becomes almost overpowering. Like the author of a novel protesting the fictitiousness of his characters, I must, therefore, make it clear that the propositions in this paper are my own, and are not necessarily shared by members of the Council or its committees and subcommittees. Indeed they have met with considerable opposition in some quarters. On the other hand, one's thoughts inevitably develop as the result of discussion with other people and I am grateful to my colleagues, and particularly the members of the subcommittee on 'The Problems of the Small Audit', for the stimulation which I have received in debating these problems with them. If that debate can now 'spill over' into a rather wider circle, it may well be that the profession as a whole, and small practitioners in particular, will be able to clarify their own thoughts on some of the problems in this area which are daily assuming greater significance.

Although the title of this paper covers auditing in general, most of the discussion in it is concerned with the problems arising in audits of industrial and commercial concerns under the Companies Acts 1948 and 1967, unless the context obviously implies otherwise. I also restrict the discussion primarily to such audits as they affect the small practitioner whom I envisage typically as a member of a one to four partner firm with a mixed practice including a number of family companies.

Introduction

DURING the short period of the last fifteen years (the present extent of my professional career), there have been enormous advances in the practice of accountancy as a whole, and not least in the development and spread of new auditing techniques. There is no doubt that papers delivered at various Institute courses have contributed very substantially to the spread of knowledge, but the groundwork for these advances has depended primarily upon the enlightened approach of many of the larger firms, several of which have been particularly active in this direction. The profession as a whole owes a considerable debt to them. Inevitably, however, the approach and techniques which have been developed by the larger firms have been primarily based on considerations of the larger companies, of which they are normally the auditors, and it is, therefore, pertinent to consider the extent to which it is relevant and practicable to apply these techniques to smaller audits, and if not, to consider the implications of not doing so.

1.2. The fact that there are many problems specifically related to the audit of smaller businesses does not, of course, mean that the audit of the large company by the large firm is devoid of problems as recent history has amply demonstrated. Though the two sets of problems tend to be different in character, all audits of companies fall under the same legislation, irrespective of size. It is against the background of this common legislation and in the context of the auditing leadership of the forward thinking firms that we may now consider some of the specific problems relating to the small company and its auditor.

1.3. The problems can be considered in two main subdivisions:

- (a) those which arise within the practitioner's firm and in his relationship with the client company, and
- (b) those which are inherent in the organization of the client company.

The first group of problems arises because the auditor carries out a variety of duties for the client, additional to the audit, and since his own office is very often not departmentally sub-divided there is a lack of separation both physically and psychologically of the statutory auditing function from the other functions (e.g., preparation of accounts, taxation, etc.), which the company expects its professional accountants to handle. In addition the client is frequently not clear in his own mind as to the purpose of an audit and may be under a misapprehension in this respect. To some extent these problems apply in all firms handling small audits, but they are more marked in the case of the small practitioner.

1.4. The second group of problems arises because the

Mr K. J. Sharp, the author of this paper presented last Saturday at the Oxford Summer Course of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, is a partner in Armstrong, Watson, Milburn, Wyllie & Co, of Carlisle. He has been a member of the Council of the Institute since 1966.

Since this paper was written, certain changes have been made in the layout of the Members' Handbook. Section S 8 is now V 8, and S 16 is now V 16.

company is small and it therefore frequently does not have built into it the systems which it is normal to find in a large organization. Very often the ultimate day-to-day managerial and accounting controls rest in one individual.

The small company and its audit

2.1. The term 'small company' probably means different things to different people and definition would be difficult. In the context of this paper, however, it is:

A private company which – (a) has not installed full internal control systems because it would be uneconomical or impracticable to do so, and/or (b) the managerial and accounting functions are substantially within the control of a single individual.

2.2. This description encompasses companies varying in extent from the proverbial (and actual) sweet shop on the corner up to some not insubstantial industrial concerns employing a hundred or more operatives.

2.3. A small company may or may not have some shareholders separated from management, but it is a normal characteristic that at least a substantial part of the shareholdings will be in the hands of those who are actively engaged in management. Such a business is frequently referred to as a family company and this indicates the purposes for which it primarily exists – to provide a livelihood and/or investment income for a particular family group or groups. It must, however, be remembered that within one or two generations from original foundation, there is often a substantial proportion of shareholders who are not engaged in management.

2.4. The fact that the business has been organized in corporate form is frequently an historical accident arising from fiscal or other non-commercial considerations rather than an original desire to limit liability. Nevertheless, although the original rationale behind the structure may in some respects be a positive disadvantage, proprietors have shown a curious reluctance in the face of recent fiscal and company legislation to change the structure, or even to register as unlimited companies. (Incidentally the audit requirements of unlimited companies are no different from those which are limited, though effectively responsibility of the auditors to third parties may be reduced.)

2.5. It is perhaps noteworthy, considering the emphasis placed on auditing in company legislation, that there is no definition of an audit in any Companies Act. The Concise Oxford Dictionary defines it thus:

'Official examination of accounts; searching examination, esp. Day of Judgement.'

Experience does not suggest that an audit requires quite such a traumatic description as is suggested by this last phrase, and the Institute's first Statement on Auditing, U1, describes the term in more mundane phraseology but greater length at paragraph 8 which is reproduced as appendix 'A'.

2.6. One of the most distinctive aspects of the audit of the small company is the very much more detailed knowledge of the day-to-day workings and problems of his client, which the auditor normally has, than is frequently the case in the larger audit. He also usually has a closer personal relationship with the management of the company with whom he discusses problems in a more informal and friendly atmosphere than is perhaps customary in the larger case. This has the result that the auditor acquires an indefinable subjective feel about the company which is bound to have a considerable influence upon him when he is considering his report. While this may be of considerable assistance to him, he must guard against any subjective interference with the objective assessment of the company's accounts, which it is his duty to make.

Responsibility and liability

3.1. It is clear that the auditor's prime duty is to report to the shareholders of the company who, whether or not they are also managers, are the proprietors of the company. It is natural that where the shares are entirely owned by management, the auditor may feel that his duties are less onerous than they would be if there were even one outside shareholder. This, however, is a dangerous attitude, and the dangers have increased since the enactment of the Companies Act 1967. Even though prior to this legislation an auditor of an exempt private company would normally only have his report read (if at all) by the shareholders, the inspector of taxes and perhaps the company's bankers, those bankers or other third parties with whom he had no contractual liability who relied on the accounts and the auditors' report and suffered loss thereby, might be in a position to claim damages if they could prove negligence on the part of the auditor. This, as I understand it, is the effect of the decision in Hedley Byrne & Co Ltd v. Heller & Partners Ltd ([1963] 2 All ER 575), which is discussed in section S8 of the Members' Handbook. I always feel when reading this section that counsel in his opinion may have been a little oversanguine in suggesting that the auditor would, to be liable, have to be shown to have had reason to know that the accounts would be shown to third parties for a specific reason.

3.2. With the introduction of the Companies Act 1967 the status of exempt private company disappears, and it therefore follows that the accounts of all companies must be filed with the annual return at the Companies Registry and are thus available for inspection by any person. It is, in my opinion, arguable that in the light of the Hedley Byrne decision, an auditor who negligently gave an unqualified report on a company's accounts would be liable to a claim for damages in the event of loss being suffered by any creditor who had granted credit on the strength of the accounts filed at the Companies Registry. In other words, although the 1967 Act did not expand the auditor's duties to third parties in the legal sense, the general availability of the accounts of previously exempt private companies may have effectively produced such a result.

3.3. However, whether or not the combined effects of the Hedley Byrne decision and the Companies Act 1967 have led to an effective increase in the liability of auditors of small companies, it is surely no more than a matter of professional duty and personal satisfaction to carry out a competent job and to report disinterestedly in the light of an opinion formed in the exercise of skilled professional judgement.

3.4. It is desirable that there should be no doubt in the client's mind as to what are the duties which the practitioner is undertaking, and for this reason it is always desirable that a letter of engagement, differentiating between audit and other work, should be sent to the client. The adoption of this procedure would do more than almost anything else to clarify the minds of small businessmen as to the purposes of an audit and would lead to a considerable improvement in client relationship. It also provides an opportunity to make the directors aware of their responsibility for the safeguarding of assets. Specimen letters of engagement appear in the Members' Handbook in section S16.

The audit approach

4.1. Modern auditing techniques developed by large firms in the context of big companies concentrate very markedly on the examination of systems of internal control, and it is now widely accepted that a consideration of the adequacy of such systems in a company's organization is one of the principal methods enabling an auditor to form an opinion as to whether the accounts show a true and fair view. This is not to say that the balance sheet audit is of diminished importance. Indeed verification of assets and liabilities is a fundamental aspect of any audit, large or small. In some cases it will be found that although control systems are deficient a combination of asset verification and other extensive tests will persuade the auditor that he may safely give an unqualified report.

4.2. If, however, the growing emphasis on the importance of examination of systems of internal control means that frequently the approach to the audit of the smaller business is materially different from the approach to the audit of the larger business, it is important to consider whether it is right that anyone, be he shareholder, creditor, bank manager or inspector of taxes, should be led to believe that as great reliance can be placed on the accounts of the small business as on those of the large. The answer to this problem must inevitably lie in a consideration of whether the work carried out during the audit of a small company, albeit that it is different in some respects, enables the auditor to report as adequately in relation to that company as is the case with the larger one. In considering this question it is surely reasonable to consider what work can and ought to be done in carrying out an audit of a small company, for only in the light of this consideration can the report as such be properly contemplated. It is necessary first to consider what an auditor's duties are.

4.3. In section 14 of the Companies Act 1967, these duties are clearly set out and for ease of reference the section is reproduced as appendix 'B'. To perform his duties properly the auditor must carry out the specific terms of this section in the context of the principles enunciated in U1.

Problems in the firm

4.4. As I indicated earlier, some of the problems facing the auditor of the small company arise in the context of his own organization. In the normal case, the practitioner is required by his client company (1) to prepare the accounts from books which have been kept by the company, (2) to audit the accounts, and (3) to settle the taxation computation. Other professional services may be called for by the client, but this is the usual basic framework. There can be little doubt that many firms of accountants in the past, and regrettably there are still some in the present, have carried out the first and last of the three duties and rested on the implicit assumption that, because the accounts had been prepared by the firm's staff, it followed that there was little need to do any further audit work other, perhaps, than routine verification of fixed assets and extensive vouching of invoices, the latter in conjunction with the preparation of accounts. The accountant's interview with his client would relate primarily to the implications of the accounts for taxation (e.g., the amount of directors' remuneration) and the appropriate division of the relevant expenditure between revenue and capital, and little or no reference would be made to the audit as such. Despite this lack of reference, however, many members will know only too well that in the event of defalcations being discovered other than in the course of an audit, the client is very quick to indicate that he had always assumed that a diligent search for fraud had been undertaken, and indeed that that was the purpose of the audit. Such an approach both by the auditor and by the client is, of course, to be deplored.

4.5. It is vital for the future reputation of the profession that in dealing with small company clients the auditor should cultivate an audit approach, appreciating that his appointment as auditor is a statutory one and that his duties cannot be restricted or replaced by such other requirements as his client may make of him. The responsibility of the auditor should be clearly defined to the client and it should be pointed out that the discovery of fraud is ancillary to the audit. The engagement letter is the ideal vehicle for this. It is doubtless preferable (though frequently impractical) where a firm is required both to prepare accounts and act as auditors, that there should be two entirely separate teams dealing with the company, each operating under the control of a separate partner, though in very small cases the audit 'team' may consist of no more than the partner. The first team would prepare the accounts and the taxation computation, and the second team would carry out the audit. In practice, of course, the work of the two teams would be to some extent coincidental in time and indeed it is probable that the audit would commence at an earlier date than the preparation of accounts. In such a situation, it is of course not reasonable to expect the 'audit team' to examine the work of the 'accounts team' in detail, and indeed provided they were satisfied as to the accounting competence of their colleagues, they would concern themselves primarily with such matters as verification and valuation of stock, debtors and creditors when examining the final accounts. Nevertheless their work in examining the records maintained on the company's premises would be carried out in considerably greater depth. Wherever a firm is big enough to contemplate such an approach, I would recommend that it should do so. It also has an added advantage for the client in that two partners in the firm are fully conversant with his affairs. I know that in considering how to deal with the smaller client requiring accountancy services as well as audit, one major firm has decided that it must adopt precisely this approach which, I would suggest, is the preferable solution, and ensures the total independence which is the true hallmark of the audit approach. It may be objected that substantial extra costs would be involved and the client would object to the increased fees; one may answer that the increase would not be as great as is imagined if the work is organized intelligently and that in any case the client cannot evade a statutory duty merely on account of the cost involved.

4.6. While it must be admitted that in the majority of firms such an idyllic solution is for one reason or another not practical, it is nevertheless important to organize a practice so that as far as possible the advantages of such a scheme are achieved. It is, therefore, crucial that partners and staff should know at any moment of time when dealing with a company's books whether they are preparing accounts or auditing, for the two activities are mutually exclusive. The relevant staff should, wherever practicable, be divided into two groups to carry out the two functions. It is also crucial that some person within the firm who has not been concerned in the detail of preparing the accounts should examine them critically. Such a duty seems to fall naturally within the province of the partner who should therefore leave the detailed work of preparation entirely to the supervision of a senior clerk, carrying out at the end of the assignment a critical review, not only of the accounts, but also of the audit procedures.

4.7. The division between the duties of the accountant and the duties of the auditor is perhaps best appreciated by realizing that whereas the accountant is acting as agent for the directors, upon whom responsibility for the form and content of the accounts lies, the auditor is reporting independently to the shareholders. This is still true even when directors and shareholders are synonymous.

4.8. There are, of course, some cases where the records maintained in the company consist of little more than a file of invoices, cheque book stubs and bank statements, from which the accounts are prepared by one person working in the accountant's office, and his working papers are effectively an important part of the company's books. It is important that if the accountant is (as is usual) the auditor of such a company, he must ensure that his statutory duty is carried out, though it may be that in terms of fees the client finds himself paying an additional penalty for having chosen to conduct his trade within the framework of a company. Such additional fees as he may be called upon to pay, however, may not be entirely lost, because a modern approach to auditing will result in much assistance being given to the client in recommendations for the safeguarding of his assets and the efficient running of his business.

4.9. Few small practitioners have the time to produce their own manuals, and there is need for a published model dealing specifically with the small company. A reasonably practical approach, however, is to adopt within an office the manual and procedures of a large firm and distribute copies to all partners and senior members of staff with instructions to apply the procedures wherever appropriate. After the first audit it becomes clear which areas of the company's activity are susceptible to this treatment and which have to be handled by alternative procedures. It also rapidly becomes clear which areas are capable of improvement in practice and, therefore, sensibly open to constructive suggestions in a letter of weaknesses.

4.10. It is suggested that in the adoption of an audit approach along these lines, lies the answer to many of the problems in the smaller audit which arise in the relationship between the auditor and the client and within the auditor's own firm.

Problems in the company

4.11. The other category of problems arises because of the inherent nature of a small company. These often arise from inadequacies of control which are frequently inevitable. The inadequacies may arise because the structure of the client's organization is such that it would be uneconomic to engage the necessary staff or install the necessary systems to ensure that there is an integrated system of internal control. Even if the personnel in lower echelons are adequate for the installation and operation of such a system, the effective managerial and accounting control of the business is frequently in the hands of one individual.

4.12. The audit approach to dealing with those sections in which the internal control is deficient, is to intensify the examination of the records by increasing the amount of testing, but there are cases where no amount of testing will enable the auditor to form an opinion as to whether the records enable the accounts to show a true and fair view so far as those particular sections are concerned. An obvious case is a retail shop with no cash register and only one assistant. Even the gross profit check is of doubtful validity with the ending of resale price maintenance.

4.13. In the case of the company where there are adequate systems of control, but one-man management, the problems are significantly reduced in volume, though not in importance. The situation in such a case has been considered in depth in a pamphlet written under the auspices of the Canadian Institute and entitled Internal Control in the Small Business, to which reference will be made later.

4.14. It is perhaps worth considering here the detail of the accounts upon which the auditor is reporting. Hitherto it has been customary, when the filing of accounts with annual returns was not necessary, for complete details of manufacturing, trading and profit and loss accounts showing separately the sundry operating costs to form part of the accounts to which the auditor referred in his report. To the extent that the information thus disclosed exceeded the requirements of the Companies Act 1948, the auditor was taking upon himself a more onerous task than the legislature had envisaged for him. The desire, however, of company directors to reduce disclosure to the minimum has brought to notice the relatively small amount of information which it is in fact necessary, under the 1967 Act, to disclose in published profit and loss accounts. Though, obviously, companies and tax inspectors will require the expanded and detailed form for their own purposes, there is no reason for such additional information to form part of the accounts upon which the auditor is reporting. This should be made clear to the client and, in my opinion, in order to emphasize the point, there is merit in ensuring that in any set of accounts to which an auditor's report is annexed, and which includes such additional information, there is a page preceding the detailed profit and loss accounts and other analyses bearing words such as – 'The pages which follow do not form part of the statutory accounts of the company'. An alternative is to type the subsidiary information on coloured paper. In any event, the auditor's report should state clearly the pages to which it refers.

Some practical problems

Proper books

5.1. Section 14 (4) of the Companies Act 1967 makes it clear that part of the auditor's duty is to carry out such investigations as will enable him to form an opinion as to whether proper books of account have been kept by the company. Proper books of account are referred to in the Companies Act 1948 at sections 147 and 331. The first two subsections of section 147 read as follows:

- (1) Every company shall cause to be kept proper books of account with respect to –
 - (a) all sums of money received and expended by the company and the matters in respect of which the receipt and expenditure takes place;
 - (b) all sales and purchases of goods by the company;
 - (c) the assets and liabilities of the company.

The private company dilemma and how to solve it

Shareholdings of a private company director may produce insuperable problems at death, and his family's finances suffer irreparable damage.

Often the only way of raising the money to pay estate duty is an enforced sale or liquidation of the company.

Many directors believe that the only way to avoid this is to sell some of the equity to an institutional investor. And this they have always resisted.

In fact, it is possible to overcome the problem through a simple life assurance solution which may cost the director nothing and can ensure that no equity goes outside the family or families.

- (2) For the purposes of the foregoing subsection, proper books of account shall not be deemed to be kept with respect to the matters aforesaid if there are not kept such books as are necessary to give a true and fair view of the state of the company's affairs and to explain its transactions.

5.2. It will be seen that this section deals with the basic requirements upon which the auditor must form his opinion as to the adequacy of the books and section 331 describes further requirements in the absence of which criminal proceedings may ensue in the event of a winding-up. In strict terms, it is only the requirements of section 147 which have to be fulfilled for the auditor to be able to give an unqualified report, though even in the case of this minimum, there are occasions when a qualification becomes necessary. The second subsection provides scope for the exercise of the professional judgement of the auditor and is frequently overlooked in considering the adequacy of accounting systems.

5.3. There is considerable controversy in accounting circles at present as to whether it is proper to restrict the definition of proper books to the strict terms of section 147, and the view has been forcibly expressed that it is desirable that proper books should be taken to include the provision of adequate information to inform the directors during the course of the accounting year of the progress of the company and to enable them to take management decisions. I am in no doubt that it is desirable that the next addition to companies legislation should include such an extension of the term (which will doubtless be modernized to 'accounting records'), but my own opinion is, so far as the present is concerned, that the auditor is carrying out a statutory duty and where a statutory definition of a term is laid down, then the auditor is bound thereby and need not go further. On the other hand it is clearly desirable that members of the profession should encourage, by all means in their power, improvements in the standard and utilization of accounting records, and it may be that one can go some way towards achieving this objective as a by-product of recommending improvements to internal control systems and the additional recording that may therefore be required. This problem is dealt with in section 8 of the document 'Companies Legislation in the 1970s', published by the Institute last year, and it is to be hoped that the proposals indicated therein will be adopted early in this new parliament.

Verification of assets

5.4. Developments in this field in recent years have been enormous. I can remember well the incredulity with which many members of the 1960 Oxford summer course received the statements in the paper by Mr D. D. Rae Smith, M.C., B.A., F.C.A., entitled 'Auditing: the purpose and its attainment', and the even more categorical statements which he made while going round groups, to the effect that auditors ought, as a matter of course, to attend company stocktakings. Though feelings were not so strong, rather the same reaction was met in relation to the proposal for systematic circularization of debtors. Prior to that, outside the larger accounting firms, verification of assets tended to be restricted to examination of deeds, counting of cash, obtaining a bank certificate, a simple stock certificate (sometimes) and a check of the vehicle registration books. There has been an enormous change in the situation in a very short time. The problems of attendance at stock-taking were handled rather tentatively in the second statement on auditing, U2, published in 1962, which has been superseded by U9 and U11 in the last two years. U7 published in 1967 deals with circularization of debtors. It must now be true to say that all practising chartered accountants are aware that more attention has to be given to these items. There are, however, practical difficulties both within the office and in relation to client reaction. Attendance at stock-taking can create considerable staffing problems when a substantial number of clients have accounting years ending on the same date. In considering his organization, however, the auditor must bear in mind that attendance at stock-taking is only necessary if the amount of stock in relation to the accounts is material, and it is astonishing how many clients either have no stock at all or else the stock is so small in relation to profit and assets that a substantial error would be immaterial in relation to the accounts as a whole. Further, it is not always necessary, even when stock is material, to attend the whole of stock-taking annually; the procedure should be observed and suitable tests made covering the whole of the stock over a period of years. However, it is still true that in the case of some practices, and in particular the small ones, a considerable strain could be thrown on a firm's resources at certain dates in the year. This is a problem with which we must somehow cope, one possible solution being to take on temporary staff for the purpose.

5.5. A greater problem than internal organization for stock-taking frequently arises in relationships with the client on the first occasion on which the auditor indicates that he wishes to attend the stock-taking. Reactions to the proposal can vary from an enthusiastic welcome to a downright refusal, though in extremis the auditor has the right to rely on section 14 (5) of the Companies Act 1967. There is no doubt that difficulty can be experienced and considerable tact is sometimes required in explaining to the client the reasons for insistence on attendance at stock-taking. Reliance exclusively on recommendation U9 is not always wholly convincing as the client may observe that Institute recommendations do not have the force of law. Some auditors are understandably worried about the potential loss of a valued client. In fact, the number of occasions when real difficulty has been experienced appears to be relatively small, provided a reasonable approach is made to the client beforehand so that he has time to inform his own staff. There are, however, the occasions on which the client is completely intransigent, and the auditor has the alternative either of bowing to his client's wishes and not attending the stock-taking, or of losing the audit. Of these two there can be no question that the former is the worse. The prospect of retaining a client who knows that all he has to do to obstruct the auditor is to threaten his removal is to establish the worst possible professional relationship, and it is far better for an auditor's dignity, self-confidence, and professional reputation to lose the audit rather than kow-tow to a bullying client. Experience suggests that very few clients are in fact lost when a firm, but tactful, approach is used, and those that do go are usually the least desirable.

Professional reasons

5.6. An interesting aspect of the loss of an audit under these circumstances arises in relation to the ethical problems which may follow. In the first place, of course, the existing auditor may decline to submit his resignation, if it is requested, in which case he remains in office until the next annual meeting, (or an earlier extraordinary general meeting if called) and will, therefore, have an opportunity of circulating and addressing the shareholders. In the case of the 'one man' company, this would doubtless have little effect, but where there are any shareholders outside management it is desirable that the auditor should take the opportunity of explaining to them the reasons, as they appear to him, for his dismissal. In the majority of cases, however, his removal in one way or another is inevitable, and it will then follow that in due course another accountant will write to ask whether there is any professional reason why he should not accept appointment. Some new auditor will ultimately be appointed and the circumstances which have led the auditor to lose his appointment do not in themselves amount to a professional reason for the prospective auditor declining acceptance. The auditor should, however, in replying to the prospective auditor's inquiry, indicate the matters leading to his removal, and in these circumstances the question would arise as to whether or not the prospective auditor would be guilty of discreditable conduct if he did not make it clear to the directors of the company that in accepting appointment it would be on the understanding that he would be entitled to carry out such tests in relation to stock-taking (or whatever was the cause of disagreement) as he thought appropriate. (In all cases, of course, the new auditor must use his judgement as to which tests it is appropriate to apply in the circumstances, irrespective of the programme adopted by his predecessor.) In the majority of cases it is probable that the client would accept these terms from the new auditor, even though they were the reasons for the removal of the previous one. If, however, the client indicated that he would not accept such terms, then the prospective auditor would have no alternative but to decline the appointment. There is little doubt that only by applying a strict ethical code, backed by the disciplinary remedies open to the Council, can improved auditing standards be enforced in circumstances such as have been outlined. It has not yet been formally stated that failure to apply Institute recommendations on auditing amounts to discreditable conduct, but it seems clear that such a rule will have to be introduced if members do not voluntarily adopt such an approach themselves. In a recent case referred to the Investigation Committee arising from the loss of an audit by a member as a result of insisting on attendance at stock-taking, the Committee indicated to the new auditor that it would wish to be satisfied that he had had full regard to the points of principle raised by the old auditor.

Training

5.7. A practical problem which can assume considerable significance is that of training staff in a practitioner's office operating on archaic procedures at the time of conversion to a modern audit approach. Indeed these problems may sometimes extend to partners. It cannot be expected that the changeover from the habits of, perhaps, many years will be sudden or dramatic, and it is more important that it should be sure than swift. In the case of senior, and particularly qualified staff, it is desirable that they should be sent on courses run by the Institute and district societies with the specific aim of improving auditing standards. There is an Institute course in November and they are held fairly frequently in district societies with several in any year somewhere in the country. It is well worth the expenditure of the necessary time and money for senior members of staff to attend such courses and compare their experience with professional colleagues from other offices and areas.

5.8. The problem with middle grade staff is perhaps more difficult. This is usually handled by 'on the job' training under the supervision of partners and staff who have already been 'converted'. This can usefully be supplemented by formal 'classroom' instruction within the office, both to introduce new office procedures and clarify in the minds of staff what is the object of an audit. If instruction is arranged and given by several senior members, it will follow that each will become something of an expert in at least one subject. It is probably best to start the conversion campaign with a relatively straightforward subject, such as circularization of debtors or attendance at stock-taking, and extend from there into the more sophisticated problems of the ascertainment and assessment of control systems. It must be appreciated that the change in approach will create considerable problems for some of the older members of the staff.

(To be concluded.)

APPENDIX A

Statement on Auditing - U 1

Paragraph 8

The essential features of an audit are:

- (a) to make a critical review of the systems of book-keeping and internal control;
- (b) to make such tests and inquiries as the auditors consider necessary to form an opinion as to the reliability of the records as a basis for the preparation of accounts;
- (c) to compare the profit and loss account and balance sheet with the underlying records in order to see whether they are in accordance therewith;
- (d) to make a critical review of the profit and loss account and the balance sheet in order that a report may be made to the members stating whether, in the opinion of the auditors, the accounts are presented and the items are described in such a way that they show not only a true but also a fair view and give in the prescribed manner the information required by the Act.

APPENDIX B

The Companies Act 1967

Section 14

(1) The auditors of a company shall make a report to the members on the accounts examined by them, and on every balance sheet, every profit and loss account and all group accounts laid before the company in general meeting during their tenure of office.

(2) The auditor's report shall be read before the company in general meeting and shall be open to inspection by any member.

(3) The report shall -

- (a) except in the case of a company that is entitled to avail itself, and has availed itself, of the benefit of any of the provisions of Part III of Schedule 8 to the principal Act, state whether in the auditors' opinion the company's balance sheet and profit and loss account and (if it is a holding company submitting group accounts) group accounts have been properly prepared in accordance with the provisions of the principal Act and this Act and whether in their opinion a true and fair view is given –

- (i) in the case of the balance sheet, of the state of the company's affairs as at the end of its financial year;
- (ii) in the case of the profit and loss account (if it be not framed as a consolidated profit and loss account), of the company's profit or loss for its financial year;
- (iii) in the case of group accounts submitted by a holding company, of the state of affairs and profit or loss of the company and its subsidiaries dealt with thereby, so far as concerns members of the company;

(b) in the said excepted case, state whether in the auditors' opinion the company's balance sheet and profit and loss account and (if it is a holding company submitting group accounts) the group accounts have been properly prepared in accordance with the provisions of the principal Act and this Act.

(4) It shall be the duty of the auditors of a company, in preparing their report under this section, to carry out such investigations as will enable them to form an opinion as to the following matters, that is to say, –

- (a) whether proper books of account have been kept by the company and proper returns adequate for their audit have been received from branches not visited by them; and

(b) whether the company's balance sheet and (unless it is framed as a consolidated profit and loss account) profit and loss account are in agreement with the books of account and returns;

and if the auditors are of the opinion that proper books of account have not been kept for the company or that proper returns adequate for their audit have not been received from branches not visited by them, or if the balance sheet and (unless it is framed as a consolidated profit and loss account) profit and loss account are not in agreement with the books of account and returns, the auditors shall state that fact in their report.

(5) Every auditor of a company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company, and shall be entitled to require from the officers of the company such information and explanation as he thinks necessary for the performance of the duties of the auditors.

(6) If the auditors fail to obtain all the information and explanations which, to the best of their knowledge and belief, are necessary for the purpose of their audit, they shall state that fact in their report.

(7) The auditors of a company shall be entitled to attend any general meeting of the company and to receive all notices of, and other communications relating to, any general meeting which any member of the company is entitled to receive, and to be heard at any general meeting which concerns them as auditors.

(8) . . . [Amendments of other legislation].

Taxation Case

A full report of the case summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgment, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'

Frederick Lack Ltd v. Doggett

In the Court of Appeal – May 7th, 1970

Income tax – Company – Amounts of profits – Sums paid by controller – Whether from company's receipts – Whether fraud or wilful default on company's behalf – Income Tax Act 1952, section 47 (1), proviso – Finance Act 1960, section 51 – Income Tax Management Act 1964, section 6; Schedule 3, paragraphs 1, 7.

Between December 1955 and February 1958 the controlling shareholder of the company made payments totalling £10,322 which could not be accounted for by reference to his income, and he had no other source of income than the company. The company's records for the last two accounting periods had not been kept to the satisfaction of the auditors, and no accounts had been prepared for those periods. In relation to other years, for which accounts had been prepared, the trading stock had not been valued and the work in progress could not be verified. The controlling shareholder stated that he had financed transactions involving the expenditure of the sums in question, but he did not produce his bank statements. Assessments to income tax were made on the company for 1952–53 to 1957–58 in the Division in which the company's registered office was.

It was contended on behalf of the company (a) that the assessments had been made in the wrong Division, so that the General Commissioners who heard the appeals had no jurisdiction; (b) that the sums totalling £10,322 were not receipts of the company. It was contended for the Revenue that as the only source of the wealth of the controlling shareholder was the company, the sums in question must have been receipts of the company; that the assessments had been made in the correct division pursuant to paragraph (1) of Schedule 3 to the Income Tax Management Act 1964, namely, where the head office or principal place of the company's business was situated; that there had been wilful default on the company's behalf.

Held (affirming the decision of Mr Justice Plowman): (1) the General Commissioners who heard the appeal had jurisdiction to do so; (2) that the company's taxable income had been understated for the accounting periods in question; (3) that wilful default had been committed on behalf of the company.

Individual Domicile

H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A., comments on aspects of the Law Commission Working Paper No. 28, published in April. Although the title of the working paper is Family Law – Jurisdiction in Matrimonial Causes, the subject has important implications for taxation.

DOMICILE is one of those legal concepts which are easier to describe in theoretical terms than to apply consistently and recognizably in practice. The obvious identity of an individual's permanent home as thought of in Whicker v. Hume ([1858] 7 HLC 124), has, in modern times, become fragmented among his residences, his business appointments, the family from which he sprang and the spouses with which he or she has been linked, the locality in which he is most often found, and his ultimate resting-place.

Although domicile is essentially distinct from nationality, it may be helpful to think in terms of a passport or identity card. The document to be imagined will record the place of birth and the father's domicile (in the case of an illegitimate child, the domicile of the mother) and that of the husband (for a married woman), the addresses at which residences are maintained or employments exercised and a record of length of stay in each territory. The function of this document is to enable the person bearing it to have access to the appropriate Court of Law and perhaps to claim some degree of immunity from the fiscal laws of the country in which he finds himself.

Conflict of laws

In modern times it is in the context of matrimonial jurisdiction that the subject of domicile has been most debated. A petitioner cannot lay his cause before a Court which treats him or her as outside its jurisdiction, nor does it profit that individual to seek a decree of divorce or nullity from a tribunal constituted under a system of law which does not make available the remedy sought. Hence the development of 'forum-shopping' whereby the applicant departs from his normal pattern of life for a short period in order to bring himself within the qualifying criteria.

However, this procedure has its limitations in that the decree thus obtained may not be recognized by the individual's home State or other territory in which his matrimonial status is relevant. This outcome is one aspect of the conflict of laws, a description applied to the study of independent legal systems and the methods of reconciling their jurisdiction and rulings.

Even when a Court has accepted jurisdiction it does not follow that it will ignore the principles of foreign law. Indeed, it may seek to adopt them as its own by the operation technically known as renvoi. Perhaps an obvious field in which renvoi is relevant is that which concerns the examination of the imaginary identity document proposed above, with a view to a decision on the place of domicile of the holder.

It will be appreciated that the same document may lead to different findings according to whether the law of England or France (say) is applied to the facts which it records. The possible oscillations may be seen from the circumstance that the attitude of the foreign forum itself to renvoi is a factor to be taken into consideration.

At this point the question is likely to be asked: should not the elusive criterion of domicile be abandoned for the simple national identity assigned to each individual by his passport (leaving aside the relatively few cases of double nationality or statelessness)? The answer lies in the conflict of allegiance between legal and political systems. This is one of the points brought up for discussion in the Law Commission Working Paper, No. 28 on Family Law – Jurisdiction in Matrimonial Causes published in April with a view to eliciting interested comments by the end of 1970.

Thus, although the Union Jack was the emblem displayed by the English team in Mexico, it is the flag of St George which correctly symbolizes merry England and the law Courts of England to which its inhabitants must apply for justice. Not only is the judiciary of Scotland and Northern Ireland independent – the systems of law they administer differ both in fundamentals and in modern distinctions.

A pertinent illustration is the Divorce Reform Act 1969 which with effect from 1971 prescribes, for England only, the sole ground on which a petition for divorce may be presented to the Court by either party to a marriage as 'that the marriage has broken down irretrievably'.

Citizenship and nationality

This writer's passport describes him as a 'British Subject: Citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies'. It does not specify whether he is entitled to address himself to the Courts of Scotland, in which his father was domiciled, or those of England – the country in which his living interests are centred.

One may pause here to deplore the regular mis-translation from Continental documents which describes living interests in terms of one's vitals. This may be seen in paragraph (2) (a) in article 4 of the double tax agreement with France (SI 1968 No. 1869) which seeks to solve the case of a doubly resident individual with a permanent home in both countries by deeming him to be resident at his centre of vital interests (the State with which his personal and economic relations are closest).

That phrase is lifted verbatim from the corresponding model article in the Draft Double Taxation Convention on Income and Capital, published in 1963 by the Fiscal Committee of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). The article is headed 'Fiscal Domicile' but in fact concerns itself with the concept of tax citizenship, often referred to in UK law under the description 'ordinary residence'.

The Law Commission Working Paper draws attention to the conflict between the use of nationality in Continental laws as a basis of divorce jurisdiction and the use of domicile in some Commonwealth countries. The latter can perhaps more easily recognize the change in domicile of a permanent immigrant than the change in his nationality. For federated States, however, the difficulty remains of deciding with which regional division the new arrival is to be identified. The same problem presents itself in the UK where his allegiance may lie to the Courts of England, Scotland, or Northern Ireland.

Long arm of the law

It is in relation to domicile that the law may be likened to an elephant – it is never willing to forget an individual's domicile of origin. This rule is important for empire-builders and merchant venturers since it ensures for the expatriate the application of the Rupert Brooke principle: there's some corner of a foreign field that is for ever England (or Scotland or Northern Ireland).

From paragraph 37 of their Working Paper it seems that the Law Commission have attached undue importance to the preservation of a rule which may be thought to have been outmoded with the recognition accorded to non-European civilized systems by the House of Lords in Casdagli v. Casdagli ([1919] AC 145). If the UK matrix has been exchanged for work and family life in some other member of the United Nations Organization for periods of perhaps 10, 20, or 30 years, is it unreasonable that recourse should be had to the Courts of the host country in personal matters and that fiscal allegiance be transferred to the land of practical adoption?

Concern for expatriates appears to be the only obstacle which precludes de jure recognition of a de facto domicile of choice, the practical unattainability of which has called forth unanimous strictures. Thus the First Report of the Private International Law Committee (Cmd 9068) instances the presumption in favour of a domicile of origin established by such cases as Winans v. Attorney-General ([1904] AC 287), and Ramsey v. Liverpool Infirmary ([1930] AC 588). In these instances, either force of circumstances or inertia could be pointed to as explaining the non-resumption of residence in the original country of domicile.

A converse result is that it is relatively easy to claim the continued existence of a non-United Kingdom domicile as a fact, despite habitual residence in the United Kingdom. The attraction for a moneyed man so placed lies in the absence of a charge to United Kingdom income tax or capital gains tax on receipts derived abroad and retained there. Since an effective standard rate of 91.25 per cent impinges on incomes over £15,000, there is a strong incentive to arrange one's affairs, if possible, so that income arising abroad is reinvested there and only instalments of original capital remitted (tax-free) or gains realized therefrom (taxed at 30 per cent).

As regards estate duty, the law of Great Britain waives its claim as regards property owned by one not domiciled in that British Isle, or comprised in a settlement effected by a settlor when thus qualified, provided that the 'proper law' regulating the devolution of the property is neither that of England nor Scotland (section 28 (2) of the Finance Act 1949). A problem arises as to when the status of the deceased has to be considered in the case of a gift and in re Kettle deceased (47 ATC 309), Plowman, J., decided on the date of death. Guidance as to the implications of the 'proper law' may be obtained from Dymond's Death Duties (14th edition, Part V).

Once the attribution of a foreign character to the deceased's possessions is in prospect, the need for double taxation relief comes into view – perhaps with particular reference to circumstances in which domicile is disputed. The word 'domicile' is a term of art in English law, with only imperfect parallels in both Anglo-Saxon and Continental legal systems, and one may usefully notice the discussion in the OECD Draft Double Taxation Convention on Estates and Inheritances published in 1966. In that context the main criteria of liability in member countries, to be applied separately or concurrently, are itemized as firstly, the fact that the deceased was domiciled or had his habitual place of abode in the taxing State. Alternative criteria look to the situation of the property, nationality of the deceased and even the fiscal status of the beneficiaries.

Location and residence

It seems a fair comment that an individual who returns to his country of origin will have the utmost difficulty in persuading a Court in the British Isles that he has either established or retained an intermediate domicile of choice. It appears that no formal steps are necessary for the acquisition of a domicile of choice according to English law (R. H. Graveson on Conflict of Laws, sixth edition, Chapter 6). In the classic case of the goods of Raffanel ([1863] 3 Sw. & Tr. 49), a French domicile of choice was not forfeited by a lady of English origin whose decision to return to her native land was frustrated when she was taken ill at Calais.

However, in CIR v. Cohen (16 ATC 190; 21 TC 301), a return to England seems to have tipped the scales in favour of a decision that the English domicile of origin had been retained, despite a life-time in business in Australia, an Australian marriage, household goods in store, and a grave-plot in reservation. Incidentally, this was a case in which Finlay, J., reversed the decision of the Special Commissioners, although it might be thought that this subject is one which could best be left to a tribunal of fact.

That, indeed, was the view of the Supreme Court of the Republic of Ireland in Lord Iveagh v. The Revenue Commissioners (1 ITC 316), a case in which the judgments are notable for the breadth of their review of the law of domicile as well as for the ultimate decision to remit the matter to the Special Commissioners in Dublin for a conclusive finding.

The exercise of a choice of domicile is likely to be recognized in the case of an individual attaining the age of majority in a different country from that in which his parent was domiciled at the date of his birth (Henderson v. Henderson ([1965] 2 WLR 218)). The Law Commission (paragraph 45, supra) considers that any married person over 16 should have this right, as was proposed in the Domicile Bills of 1958 and 1959. However, some hesitation may be felt at the proposed withdrawal of a firm domicile status for children, already susceptible to multifarious arrangements for their custody.

The rule that a married woman at once acquires her husband's domicile may be convenient in simple circumstances but accentuates the difficulties which arise when the husband's domicile is uncertain or the marriage is on the verge of breakdown. The natural tendency for a wife or widow to reorientate herself in her country of origin is at variance with the influence of her domicile of dependence. The consequent legal and fiscal obstacles, including those which flow from the domicile of her children, are likely to impede her rehabilitation.

However, in their Seventh Report (Cmd 1955), the Private International Law Committee concluded that to confer on a married woman, who is not separated from her husband by an order of a Court of competent jurisdiction, a right to acquire a separate domicile for all purposes would involve legal complications outweighing any advantages that might accrue. The Law Commission favours the independent determination of a wife's domicile for the purpose of granting her access to the English Courts (it will be appreciated that the Working Paper under discussion does not seek to make recommendations about Scottish or Irish law).

Income tax and capital gains tax

Recognition of a wife's separate domicile for tax purposes would have important consequences. As regards residence, the rule in section 42 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 is that a married woman is to be treated as living with her husband (leading to aggregation of her income with his) unless they are separated by Court order or deed of separation, or they are in fact separated in such circumstances that the separation is likely to be permanent. Moreover, such a separation is attributed to them if one party to the marriage is non-resident for a year of assessment or (if both are 'resident') if one is absent from the UK throughout that year. It would seem that the term 'resident' means ordinarily resident, since residence is incompatible with complete absence.

That Parliament can make the necessary arrangements to protect fiscal privileges of UK residents enjoying foreign domicile appears from the rule enacted in 1956, now found in section 181 of the 1970 Taxes Act. This limits the charge to tax under Case III of Schedule E so far as concerns the emoluments of a person not domiciled in the UK from an office or employment under or with any person, body of persons, or partnership resident outside (and not resident in) the UK. Such 'foreign' emoluments are chargeable on the basis of remittances to the UK in the chargeable period (of residence) for current service or prior service while resident, together with emoluments for that chargeable period received earlier.

Disputes relating to domicile

Section 207 provides that where a dispute arises in this connection as to domicile, the question is to be referred to and determined by the Board of Inland Revenue. When they give notice of their decision, the person concerned has the unusually long period of three months in which to make an application to have the question heard and determined by the Special Commissioners, in the same way as an appeal. This connotes a right under section 56 of the Taxes Management Act 1970 to have a case stated for the decision of the High Court if immediate intimation of dissatisfaction on a point of law is declared to the Special Commissioners and a written request forwarded within thirty days to the accompaniment of a £1 fee. An appeal lies from the High Court to the Court of Appeal and thence to the House of Lords, subject to leave.

Under section 12 of the Administration of Justice Act 1969, the High Court Judge may grant a certificate permitting the appeal to be taken direct to the House of Lords. Pending any directives by way of Order in Council, it is requisite not only that there should be a point of law of general importance involved in the decision but also that the point is one in which the judge is bound by a considered decision of a superior Court. In the context of domicile the alternative ground of a 'leapfrog' appeal – the construction of a statute or statutory instrument – does not appear relevant.

Mention should also be made of the extension of the exemption from taxation of payments on retirement or removal from office or employment (golden handshakes), in cases where the emoluments ranked as foreign emoluments. The exemption is also available as regards service outside the UK comprising ten out of the past 20 years, or (if less) the whole of the final ten years, or at any rate three-fourths of the whole period of service.

These criteria for foreign service do not apply to a payment as compensation for loss of office, for which exemption is available if immediately following three years of service wholly abroad (incidental duties excepted), or if service arose under a contract which did not require performance of any duties in the UK (section 188 (2) of the 1970 Taxes Act).

AUSTRALIA

Society's New President

MR L. P. CROCKETT, F.A.S.A., of Melbourne, has been re-elected President of the Australian Society of Accountants for 1970-71.

Mr Crockett, who is 45 years of age, served in RAAF Air Crew in the Second World War. He was for a period in public practice and was for some years national secretary of the Australian Junior Chamber of Commerce. He later entered industry and is now managing director of Lightweight Structural Development Ltd, Melbourne, and a director of several other public and private companies.

A member of the Council of the Victorian Division of the Society since 1962, he was honorary treasurer of that Division in 1964 and 1965, State Vice-President in 1966 and State President in 1967. He became a member of the General Council in 1967. In May 1969 he was elected President and has now been re-elected for a second term.

Mr Crockett will be an official delegate of the Society to the Sixth Conference of Asian and Pacific Accountants to be held in Singapore and Kuala Lumpur in August.

Annual Report

Although dominated by negotiations with The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Australia regarding the unity of the profession, 1969 was a busy year for the Society in many spheres of activity. For example, a considerable amount of work was done to regularize policies for qualifying education and training for admission to membership, as well as for post-qualifying education.

The annual report mentions that for some time a group of accountants and economists with a particular interest in farm accounting has been engaged in the task of evolving a standard code of terminology for use in farming accounts. Aided by a Government grant, this committee - known as the Australian Committee for Coding Rural Accounts (ACCRA) - has almost finished its work.

Throughout the year the Legislation Review Committee, under the chairmanship of Mr G. M. Andrews, M.B.E., F.A.S.A., of Sydney, continued to maintain a watching brief on the progress of the Standing Committee of Attorneys-General in its comprehensive review of company legislation.

The Society will, of course, be joint hosts with the Institute at the Tenth International Congress of Accountants in Sydney in 1972 and much work is being done by members serving on the various committees engaged in organizing the Congress.

GERMANY

Tax Allowances for Leased Plant

IN Germany, as elsewhere, long-term leasing of capital plant has been developed as an alternative to conventional hire-purchase: and financial institutions have found the position of a lessor to be legally and financially more attractive than that of a secured lender or of a 'seller' who retained title.

Until this year there was no indication of how these leasing agreements would be regarded for tax purposes. However, the American Chamber of Commerce in Germany has now reported a case in which the principal revenue court (Bundesfinanzhof) was called upon to decide whether the lessor of plant might claim capital allowances as the 'owner' within the meaning of the relevant statute.

The Court ruled that 'ownership' of leased plant did not necessarily coincide, for tax purposes, with the legal title: the lessee should be regarded as 'economic owner' if for all practical purposes he is entitled to exclude the legal owner from the equipment for the rest of its useful life.

The lessee will be considered to be the economic owner in any of the following cases:

- (1) If the basic term of the lease approximates the entire useful life of the leased object. The right of the lessor to claim the object back in certain unlikely contingencies, such as the bankruptcy of the lessee, is immaterial.
- (2) (a) If the basic term of the lease is shorter than the useful life of the leased object, but the lessee has an option to extend or to purchase; and
(b) the lessee is likely to make use of one of the two options because the consideration he would then have to pay would be considerably lower than the normal rental or purchase price. The Court rejected the argument that decreasing rent payments were justified because the lessor could claim depreciation allowances at a declining balance.
- (3) Without regard to the basic term of the lease and the useful life, if the subject of the lease was tailored for the special requirements of the lessee and he would be the only one by which such leased object could find a reasonable economic use at the end of the basic term of the lease.

Although this decision is effective only as affecting the particular capital allowances legislation, it has aroused controversy within the legal and accounting professions. The Court was not ruling on the deductibility of lease rentals for tax purposes, nor is it at present clear to what extent its opinion affects lease agreements already made.

NEW ZEALAND

Payroll Tax Introduced in Budget

A PAYROLL tax of 2 per cent, effective from August 1st on payrolls exceeding $NZ7,800 (approximately £3,500) per annum is the principal feature of the New Zealand Budget for 1970-71, introduced on June 25th. This tax, from which farmers are exempt, is estimated to produce 20 million dollars (£9 million) in 1970-71, and 33 million dollars (£15 million) in a full year.

Manufacturers will be partly compensated for the payroll tax by the reintroduction of the 10 per cent investment allowance for new plant and machinery which was suspended four years ago. New Zealand is suffering a labour shortage, and it is anticipated that the new measures will discourage companies from engaging additional staff and lead to replacing labour with machines.

Another Budget change is the substantial reduction in the rates of estate duty, which will now be levied at a maximum of 40 per cent on estates exceeding 150,000 dollars (£68,000). The previous maximum was 59 per cent on estates exceeding 76,000 dollars (£35,000). The anticipated total revenue from taxes and other receipts in 1970-71 is 1,506 million dollars (£685 million) against estimated total Government expenditure of 1,600 million dollars (£730 million), leaving a deficit of 94 million dollars (£45 million) to be financed by borrowing.

In presenting the Budget, the Finance Minister, the Hon. R. D. Muldoon, described it as mildly deflationary. It was not a Budget of personal handouts, but one in which each move had a clear social or economic purpose designed to preserve and expand the soundly-based prosperity of the country and its people.

Finance and Commerce

Blue Circle

IN company accounts figures can only be presented as they are (or more accurately as they were) rather than as a projection of what they can be expected to be. That blinding glimpse of the obvious may be applied to the 1969 accounts of The Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers Ltd, parent company of the Blue Circle Group of cement companies.

Effective from last November 14th, the price of cement was raised 13s 6d a ton and effective from April 1st there was a further increase of 6s 6d a ton. The Blue Circle accounts for 1969, therefore, merely show just how necessary the increase in price was. The accounts do not reflect the effect of the price increase except to a negligible degree in the case of the November instalment.

Trading income was barely maintained despite increased turnover and, as the result of higher depreciation and finance charges, pre-tax profits were some £4 million down, net earnings some £4.4 million down and the dividend cut from 11.385 per cent to 8.5 per cent.

Profits before debenture and loan interest and tax were only 8.9 per cent on capital employed, compared with 12.1 per cent in 1968 and as much as 17.3 per cent back in 1964. But since UK fixed assets were revalued at the beginning of last year to produce a surplus of £15,785,000, like is not being compared with like in percentage terms of return on capital employed.

New works

The revaluation of United Kingdom fixed assets resulted in increased charges for depreciation of £2,168,000, mainly in the parent company. Group finance charges increased by £1,763,000 and reflected two things - higher interest rates and large sums raised to provide capital equipment for the group's new works at Northfleet, Kent, and Hope in Derbyshire. And in the development of those two plants is another factor in the presentation of accounts on a past rather than a future, or a potential, basis.

Northfleet will be the biggest new cement works in the world with an eventual annual output of four million tons, and Hope will complement its output in the North of England by providing 1.2 million tons a year. This means that, in measurable time, 5.2 million tons a year of UK cement production will be coming from these brand new low-cost works, a figure that can be put alongside total UK market deliveries of cement by the group last year at 10.65 million. There is therefore a major potential earnings growth situation in the new plant operations.

The accounts under review reflect the worst of two particular conditions - inadequate prices during a period of restrained demand and of heavy capital spending with attendant high money costs.

In production

It will probably be for the 1971 rather than the 1970 accounts to reflect the worth of the new plants. 'The outlook for the next 18 months is considerable brighter', comments the chairman, Sir John Reiss, 'as we shall be well placed with our two new low-cost works to take advantage of any

C.

THREE-DAY COURSE FOR TOP MANAGEMENT

to be held at

THE HILTON HOTEL, PARK LANE, LONDON W1
September 29th and 30th and October 1st, 1970

This conference covers subjects of vital importance to all in business, industry and the professions. It is purposely divided into three separate days so that those who cannot attend all three will lose none of the value of the subjects on the days when they are present and so that, if desired, other members of their Company or Firm can attend in addition to or in place of a person or persons attending on the other days. A brief introduction to each is given at the beginning of the programmes.

It is our aim to bring together a wide range of Management from industry, business and the professions with a view to not only putting forward the techniques and views of the speakers, but also to encourage questions and discussion of real and pressing problems. We have found from experience of running conferences over the past years that it is a tremendous advantage to mix together in this way so that delegates gain the maximum possible benefit.

There will be three sessions on each day – 10 a.m. – 11.30 a.m., 12 noon – 1.30 p.m., and 3 p.m. – 5 p.m.

FIRST DAY THE READING AND INTERPRETATION OF ACCOUNTS AND BALANCE SHEETS (Course No. E/694/70)

These sessions will examine the place of accounts and balance sheets in modern business, the accounting principles and conventions upon which the best commercial practice is established and the techniques available for financial analysis.

The emphasis throughout will be upon the needs of proprietors, shareholders and management executives for financial information which is relevant to their particular interests and for guidance in decision. The special aspects of accounts from the viewpoint of customers, employees, creditors and bankers will also be considered.

Movement of Funds in the Business – Major items Appearing in the Balance Sheet – Analysing Balance Sheet – Questions and Discussion.

SECOND DAY COSTING FOR DECISION-MAKING. BUDGETING AND PLANNING (Course No. E/695/70)

Each year competition becomes more fierce. Managements are faced with the double necessity of remaining solvent and making an adequate profit. It is becoming more urgent to be able to recognise the growth points in the product range so that these may be encouraged, and to recognise also which products may be draining the profitability and liquidity of the Company.

A thorough understanding of the nature and behaviour of the costs that are met within an organisation is vital, and so also is the ability to apply the basic techniques for controlling and motivating the organisation towards maximising profits and minimising losses.

The techniques of costing, including marginal costing and cash flow forecasting from master budgets, will be covered.

The nature of Costs and their behaviour – Full Costing and Marginal Costing – Developing the best mix of products – Forecasting and the preparation of Master Budgets – Translation of Master Budgets into Cash-Flow forecasts – Capital Budgeting and Long-term Forecasting – Further time for questions and discussion.

THIRD DAY DISCOUNTED CASH FLOW (Course No. E/696/70)

Discounted Cash Flow is becoming more and more recognised as an important business factor, but, whilst Directors, Accountants and Managers know what D.C.F. stands for, they have not as yet the detail at their disposal to use it.

These sessions have therefore been planned first to define and run through the basics of D.C.F. and then to move on into the arithmetic, the advantages of D.C.F. over other methods, the effects of taxation, the collection of data and calculation of cash gains, basic assumptions and fallacies, leasing calculations, cost of capital, and the various other aspects of the techniques. These will be covered on the basis of the details given below and will provide some of the necessary useful data now required for the application of D.C.F.

Concept of Return on Investment – Present Value Method – Estimating the interest rate – Effect of Tax on earnings – Economic life of project – Alternative choice problems – Discounted Cash Flow – Uneven earnings – Profitability Index – Problems connected with D.C.F. – Case Study on D.C.F. – Questions and Discussion.

SPEAKERS:

Mr S. W. Ball, B.A., B.Com., A.C.A., A.C.I.S. Head of Financial Aspects, School of Management Studies, London, and a Director of Studies of the College of Production Technology and School of Business Administration. An Economist, Chartered Accountant and Consultant who has had wide practical experience in the field of finance, accounting and business management.

Mr Ernest Jones, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.Dip.M.A., Head of Professional Studies Department, City of London College. Chartered Accountant, Cost Accountant and holder of the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting, who has had wide practical experience in the field of management Consultancy, Accountancy and Business and Financial Management.

FEE: The fee for each day is £23 which includes attendance at all sessions, morning coffee, luncheon, afternoon tea, notes and binder.

What the papers say

In recent advertisements we have said a good deal about our expertise as investors in equities, and about our Investor Policy. We admit we're biased. But we have been receiving many favourable independent press comments too.

On 13th December 1969, the Daily Telegraph said:
"The Scottish Widows have a special policy which is linked to the performance of their equity investments. They are one of the oldest and most successful mutual life offices. This means that the profits which they make are shared among the policyholders. Over the years these profits have been exceptionally good. The management of the Scottish Widows has a very high reputation for investment skill. The conditions of the policy are also extremely competitive."

On 3rd January 1970, the Daily Express commented:
"The Scottish Widows Investor Policy is linked to its own separate fund. But in its short life this has done extremely well... In fact if compared with a conventional unit trust, the Investor Policy would appear in the top five performers over the last two years".

Still sceptical? The coupon below will bring more details about the Investor Policy and the Scottish Widows.

improvement in the building trade next year. Many projects have been held up or phased over a longer period and it is surely not too much to hope that the industry will be able to resume its normal growth pattern in 1971'.

At the time of writing his report – say early May – deliveries were 4.7 per cent down on 1969 but the two price increases were expected to help mitigate the effect of rising costs and the continuing depression of the market as a whole. The first kiln at Northfleet went into production in February and the second in May and, as a result, the company has been able to book export orders which will come to well over 500,000 tons this year – the highest figure since 1960.

At Northfleet the company can load bulk ships of up to 60,000 tons if necessary and is now supplying cement clinker to the Canary Islands, the West Coast of Africa, and, for the first time, to South Africa, whilst bulk cement exports to the United States 'continue at a very satisfactory level'.

Exports last year totalled 244,652 tons and deliveries by companies operating overseas totalled 7.12 million tons – an increase of 8 per cent over the previous year.

The group has overseas interests in Canada, Mexico, Kenya, Tanzania, Nigeria, Spain, New Zealand, Rhodesia, South Africa, Australia, Malaysia, and Singapore.

Distribution

A new distribution system matches national demand, with the group's total production and depot capacity at any time using information fed into an IBM 360-50 computer to establish the most economic areas of distribution for the production and distribution system as a whole. The data is processed and the result printed out direct on to maps reproduced from the Ordnance Survey. Each of these maps is divided into 10 km. squares and the computer prints into each square the appropriate source of supply to sites located in that square.

Distribution managers can then work out the actual boundaries of these areas taking into account such features as bridges and rivers.

This search for cost reduction and cost efficiency remains intense; and necessarily so when the industry is not the master of its price house. Sir John comments that if demand increased sufficiently to enable the group to operate at something over 90 per cent of capacity, which was the case up to a few years ago, many of the cement industry's difficulties at home could be overcome 'but until this happens, there is still no attraction in further capital investment in cement in this country' and the board 'will continue their endeavours to increase interests abroad, where returns are so much better'.

Last year, 62 per cent of turnover was in the UK and 38 per cent abroad, and although Sir John belabours the point of inadequacy of UK margins, the accounts do not split profits as they split turnover. It is stated in Sir John's foreword to the review accompanying the accounts that companies abroad 'made a bigger contribution to our investment income than ever before'.

Interim Figures

THE directors of R. & G. Cuthbert Ltd, the seedsmen, have, against their will and against what they clearly consider their better judgement, provided interim profits for the first time. Seeds are the seasonal business of all seasonal businesses and Cuthbert's sales during the July-December period represent only a small percentage of annual turnover and, as Lady Russon, the chairman, says, 'any indication of profit for that period would be relatively meaningless'.

But the information has to be given in line with Stock Exchange regulations and so shareholders are told that the unaudited net profit before tax for the first 28 weeks of the current financial year was £32,287. 'Your directors are of the opinion', Lady Russon states in the interim report, 'that if a profit figure for the same period in the previous year had been prepared, this would have been substantially below the figure now indicated for the current financial year'.

'Group sales to date', Lady Russon's statement added, 'also show an appreciable overall increase over the previous year.' The directors cannot see at present any reason why the full year profits should not exceed the previous year's record of £170,443.

One can quite readily understand and appreciate the feelings of the directors in being badgered by the Stock Exchange into doing something that they consider is of little value and of little meaning. But there are some points to be raised.

Gesture of confidence

The first is that the interim report was dated June 24th, which is only six days before the end of the financial year. The 'relatively meaningless' profit figure of £32,287 was indeed so since it was all of 23 weeks old. Why, one wonders, does it take so long to announce the profit of a period when apparently about one-sixth of the year's profit is earned?

Another point is the board's apparent admittance that this is the first time an interim profit figure has been prepared. Didn't the board know the interim profit situation before?

Anyway, the directors are confident enough to the full year outturn to lift the interim dividend from 7½ per cent to 10 per cent without any cautionary comment or warning to shareholders about the higher payment not necessarily indicating a higher total.

Triplex

RECENT news that Pilkington Brothers Ltd, the biggest privately-owned company in the UK, will 'go public' within the next 12 months must make minority shareholders in Triplex Holdings Ltd wonder how many numbers there are to their independent days. For some years Pilkingtons had, first, a virtual controlling interest, then an actual controlling interest, and now this has become a substantial controlling stake in Triplex.

The latest Triplex report puts the Pilkington holding at 7,876,260 shares, or 64.8 per cent of the total as at the end of last March. Twelve months earlier Pilkingtons controlled 58.6 per cent of the equity. Pilkingtons, naturally enough, are the main supplier of raw glass to Triplex.

In the past year, Triplex's safety glass turnover was just over £1 million up at £18.08 million but profits fell from £1,432,000 to £615,000, with the position only marginally retrieved by a profit of £95,000 (against a loss of £1,000) on an engineering turnover of £1.62 million against £1.43 million.

As an outlet for Pilkington production, Triplex has been worth while but as an investment in their own right the shares have not exactly been in the 'go-go' category. Since 1961, sales have risen over £10 million but whereas on a turnover of £9.42 million in 1960-61 profits available for distribution were £459,000, they were a mere £283,000 in the past year when turnover was £19.7 million with the dividend maintained at 1s 3d a share, but underearned to the extent of £473,000.

In Anticipation

OBVIOUSLY with a certain amount of feeling, the chairman of Midland-Yorkshire Tar Distillers Ltd writes in his annual review: 'No board of directors in these days can be unaware of the criticism which has been made of the confusion caused to the investing public by what our critics refer to as the absence of generally accepted accounting principles.'

He goes on to profess his belief that in a highly complex business world, uniformity is impossible and undesirable; but he agrees that: 'there is a need to disclose the accounting basis adopted in the preparation of accounts where matters of judgement are involved'. Midland-Yorkshire Tar's accounts have been given a 'new look' so that important features may be more easily seen, and the notes have been amplified.

An important innovation that the chairman considers deserves special notice is that the company's share of profits (less losses) of associated joint venture companies is included in the group profit and loss account to the extent of £107,239 against £7,628 and that redeems a profit position which in the group position was £883,987 pre-tax against £946,320.

Although the Midland-Yorkshire accounts appeared after publication of the English Institute's exposure draft on the accounting treatment of associated companies, the Midland-Yorkshire decision was clearly taken some while ago. That could have had something to do with the fact that Midland-Yorkshire's chairman is Mr Stanley Dixon, M.A., F.C.A., a Past-President of the Institute.

Rolls-Royce Shareholder's Protest

LAST year's accounts of Rolls-Royce included £10.3 million for research and development expenditure. An Eastbourne chartered accountant, Mr Leslie G. Harris, F.C.A., is pressing for detailed explanations of this heavy charge.

Mr Harris is quoted as saying 'This may have made money in the past, but I am concerned about the present position'. He has also expressed concern at the level of directors' remuneration, over £160,000, including £39,616 to Sir Denning Pearson as chairman.

The company's annual meeting will be held in Derby on July 21st, by which time Mr Harris hopes to raise a shareholders' group sufficiently powerful 'to get some action' and if necessary to make changes in the composition of the board.

2 Depreciation

Depreciation of Fixed Assets is charged from the dates of original use or subsequent valuation by equal annual amounts over the estimated lives of the assets, except that, where applicable, it is provided on a tonnage extracted basis on freehold and leasehold land. The depreciation charge for United Kingdom companies for the year ended 31st December, 1969 has been based on the valuations of fixed assets at 1st January, 1969 and on the cost of additions in the year, and is £2,168,000 more than it would have been if no valuations had taken place (£2,014,000 of this amount applies to the Parent Company).

Corporation Tax (based on profits for the year) has been provided at 42½% to 31st March, 1968 and 45% thereafter.

The above adjustments to Tax Equalisation Reserve have the effect of spreading the benefit of United Kingdom Initial Allowances over 10 years, and certain overseas Capital Allowances over various periods.

With effect from 1st January, 1969 Investment Grants are being credited to Profit and Loss Account (as a deduction from the taxation charge) over a period of 10 years. Part of the Grants received prior to 1st January, 1969 has been transferred from the surplus arising on valuation of Fixed Assets to Investment Grants Reserve for subsequent transfer to Profit and Loss Account over the balance of a period of 10 years.

6 Fixed Assets Replacement Reserve

The amount appropriated to this Reserve by United Kingdom companies represents the additional depreciation required to take account of inflation of prices at 3% per annum.

No deduction has been made for Investment Grants that may be received.

The assets of the United Kingdom companies were valued by the group's professional staff at 1st January, 1969. Interests in land were valued at market worth and plant and buildings were valued by reducing the estimated replacement cost, as new, by the fraction of expired life over total life. In determining replacement cost no reduction was made for Investment Grants.

Investment Grants will not be deducted from book values of Fixed Assets as formerly, but will be credited to Investment Grants Reserve and transferred to the credit of Profit and Loss Account over a period of 10 years.

The surplus arising on valuation amounted to £15,785,000 (Parent Company £15,135,000), of which £5,757,000 (Parent Company £5,563,000) is attributable to the change in treatment of Investment Grants.

19 Undistributed profits of overseas Subsidiary Companies amounting to £9,802,000 (1968 £8,954,000) are subject to the appropriate taxation when remitted and in some cases are subject to local exchange restrictions.

20 Conversion of Foreign Currency:—

Assets and liabilities have been converted to sterling at the rates of exchange ruling at 31st December, 1969. The repayment of certain loans, and payments which might have to be made under the guarantees mentioned in Note 18 (b), totalling £12,830,000 (1968 £12,416,000) for the Parent Company and the Group, might however involve the purchase of foreign currency at the investment currency rate.

CITY NOTES

ONCE again the stock-market has been somewhat tartly reminded of the difference, in market terms, between anticipation and fact. The change in Government led, at first, to the anticipation that all economic problems would be solved in measurable time – that miracles, in the realms of interest rates and taxation, would be performed almost overnight.

The immediate jump forward on the stock-market suggested that some people, at least, were thinking that way. But Mr Iain Macleod's first Commons statement as Chancellor of the Exchequer showed the market the hard fact that miracles are out. Admittedly, financial markets should not have expected anything other than generalities from a Chancellor of the Exchequer less than a month in office, but Mr Macleod's statement probably marked the end of the stock-market's post-election honeymoon.

The market is back to the hard graft of trying to break bullishly out of its current 320-350 FT Index bracket. The situation is probably not as bad as 320 is painted, but not all that much better than 350 looks.

Until there is some positive action by the new Government, the stock-market is likely to keep within this 30 points bracket.

THE recent performance of Poseidon shares was another prime example of the anticipation and fact difference. Before the Poseidon chairman, Mr Norman Shierlaw, appeared in London, Poseidon shares stood around £55, but his statement, apparently designed to extol the virtues of Poseidon as a solid mining proposition, saw the price of the shares marked back to £39 before there was a rally. This quite clearly surprised Mr Shierlaw at the time and he considered that his statement had not been fully understood.

But it had. It was understood as meaning that the Poseidon fun and games, which last January had seen the share price over £120, were well and truly over. Poseidon was about to become respectable, was about to raise very substantial loan finance to do dull things like sinking shafts and building townships.

Speculators are fully prepared to gamble on the anticipation of what a mine is worth, but they are not prepared to turn their speculation into an investment based on fact. Particularly one based on the fact that the development finance stage has been well and truly reached.

THE market value of the Charities Official Investment Fund at the end of 1969 was nearly £42 million, a fall during the year of nearly £3½ million, reflecting the general decline in stock market prices. The number of income shares in issue rose during the year by more than two million to some 35 million, while the number of accumulation shares in issue increased by over 300,000 to nearly 3 million. These figures are given in the Report for 1969 received by the Charity Commissioners from the trustees of the Fund.

The quarterly distributions – paid free of United Kingdom income tax – amounted to 13.65d on an income share held throughout the year. This was the highest in the seven years of the Fund's operation and is equivalent to a yield of 5.69 per cent per annum on the cost of an income share when the Fund started on January 8th, 1963, and to 5.23 per cent per annum on the cost of a share on January 6th, 1970. The distribution per income share has now been raised successively each year during the seven years that the Fund has been in operation.

THE rules of the Takeover Code on what is colloquially called 'chatting up the institutions' deterred Sir Charles Hardie from his intention of preaching the gospel of the Metropolitan Estates-Hill Samuel merger to Scottish investment trusts last week. The rules forbid this kind of action until the full formal documents have been issued, and the rules also call for all shareholders to be able to have the same information at the same time. Such briefings have to be effectively public.

Integration – Voting is Vital

SIR, – In the near future the members of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales will, presumably, receive new proxy cards together with a transcript of the proceedings at the meeting held on June 24th, 1970.

On the two votes already taken, the scheme for conglomeration has failed to command the required two-thirds majority. Thus, the poll in April 1969 failed fractionally to reach that majority, while the vote on a show of hands by 202 members at the meeting on June 24th, 1970, gave only 59.9 per cent in favour. (On the latter occasion the numbers voting for and against by proxy were withheld from the meeting.)

Members should consider the following facts:

- (1) The Scots do not want the scheme. Even on the 'Hobson's choice' basis of approval in the event of the English scheme going ahead, the Scots achieved little more than 75 per cent of those voting.
- (2) The Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants remains neutral, but has pointedly indicated its development intentions in the event of conglomeration being rejected.
- (3) The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants must in any event remain in being in some form because it has interests outside the scope of conglomeration.
- (4) The overwhelming vote in favour by the members of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants will have caused no surprise; but its Council is still playing safe by currently advertising in the national press to urge employers to 'choose a certified accountant'.

When, against this background, one re-reads the explanatory memorandum (and I suggest that all members of the Institute should do just that) one can only ask in utter amazement – for what are we asked to tear to pieces the constitution on which our Institute has grown to greatness? For what, please, for what?

Perhaps the most extraordinary of the claims made for conglomeration is that it will give the public a clearer image. The scheme gives one the impression that its draftsmen went out of their way to confuse even the members as to the significance of membership, a confusion that will increase with time – especially after the queue of accountants with overseas qualifications has streamed through the backdoor provided by the proposed by-law 35.

Every member should look at the facts, think hard, vote, and press his fellow members to vote. Conglomeration can come about only through apathy. It is inconceivable that two out of every three members want it.

Yours faithfully,

Sanderstead, Surrey.

Numerate and Literate

SIR, – What a breath of fresh air was the letter from Mr Paul Raimond in your issue of July 9th.

I was reminded of the story concerning the late Sir Winston Churchill who had placed before him a very clearly worded memorandum in which one sentence had been corrected, in red ink, by a civil servant, because it ended with a preposition. Sir Winston is reputed to have written across it:

'This is the sort of pedantry up with which I will not put'.

Yours faithfully,

London EC4.

C. B. G. TURNER, F.C.A.

SIR, – Mr Paul Raimond's comment on your article 'Numerate and Literate' appears to support the general trend in education away from the ability to speak one's own language.

Perhaps a little more emphasis on primary education, i.e., learning to read, write, spell and perform simple arithmetical exercises correctly may result in the disciplines required enhancing the character of the future inheritors of our 'permissive' and university academic egg-head society.

A comprehensive knowledge and understanding of your own language includes the ability to spell and punctuate correctly and may, indeed, obviate much of the misunderstanding created because people do not allow for correct placing of the phrases, commas and full stops.

Oh! for a return to the days, unfortunately a little before my own time, when a knowledge of your own language and simple mathematics was a pre-requisite to obtaining your first academic qualification – the old school certificate.

Please do not accept this as an example of perfect English – I do at least realize that educational standards were slipping even before I completed my own school life.

Perhaps the Institute could direct its attention to the importance of educational standards in the basic, i.e., primary, rather than the too expensive and over-rated university levels.

Yours faithfully,

Ecclesall, Sheffield.

Asset or Deferred Charge?

SIR, - I am an accountancy student working in my own country which is abroad from Great Britain. Here it is admitted that the standard of accountancy has not reached the high level of that practised in Great Britain or in the United States of America.

I am fortunate to work in an office where every effort is being made to raise the level of work produced and in this connection I have recently had a talk with my chief regarding the following matter.

A company recently had installed new toilets for its employees and the decision of my chief is that this expenditure should appear in the balance sheet, between 'Fixed assets' and 'Current assets', under the heading of 'Deferred charges'. The expenditure is being written-down to nothing in ten years by the straight-line depreciation method. The annual entry in the profit and loss account is 'proportionate charge of cost of installation of new toilets for employees'.

My view is that this expenditure should be shown under 'Fixed assets' and that the annual charge to profit and loss account should be shown under 'Depreciation - toilets for employees'.

To add force to his opinion, my chief states that as this expenditure does not add to the earnings of the company, it should not be included under 'Fixed assets'.

It would be interesting to me if some of your readers would give their views.

Yours faithfully,

JOSÉ.

Revenue Statement on Close Companies

AS announced under 'Current Affairs' in this issue, the Board of Inland Revenue have issued the following statement of practice in relation to close companies:

1. Shortfall liability of groups of trading companies

In arriving at the required standard of distributions for a parent company which is a trading company (or a 'member of a trading group', as defined by section 292 (2) Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970) the Board are prepared to have regard so far as is reasonable to the business requirements and resources of companies which are subsidiaries of the parent company and are trading companies or members of the trading group. This approach may need to be modified in particular cases, for example, where persons other than the parent company have a substantial interest in some or all of the subsidiary companies.

In arriving at the required standard of distributions for a subsidiary company which is a trading company or a member of the trading group, the subsidiary company's requirements would normally be limited to those of its own business, but the Board are prepared to have regard to the requirements and resources of other companies in the group if it is appropriate to do so, for example, where the subsidiary company has trading links with the parent company or with another subsidiary in the group.

2. Disallowed directors' remuneration

Where directors' remuneration is disallowed for corporation tax purposes for an accounting period beginning after March 31st, 1969, and that accounting period is not affected by section 28 (3), Finance Act 1969, that disallowance will not rank as a distribution for shortfall purposes. Where such a disallowance has been negotiated with the Inspector the Schedule E liability of the director will be reduced by the amount of that disallowance, provided that the amount disallowed is formally waived and refunded to the company by the director and a satisfactory settlement of the company's shortfall liability (if any) for that accounting period is reached.

3. Small shortfalls

The Board's practice under which, where a close company is a trading company, a member of a trading group or a property investment company, shortfalls amounting to £100 or less are not assessed, was published in The Accountant on February 15th, 1969. For this purpose where the property owned by a close investment company is subject to rent control and as a result Schedule A losses arise each year, the Board will regard the company as a property investment company provided that the value of the company's assets invested in real property exceeds the value of its other investments.

4. Sympathetic consideration will be given to the following types of case in which hardship may arise:

- (i) Where in computing the profits of a close trading company a relatively large amount of entertaining expenses is disallowed and the company is liable to a shortfall based on the maximum required standard of distributions.
- (ii) Where a company has made distributions up to its maximum required standard in an accounting period and the corporation tax profits for that accounting period are reduced because of some factor beyond the company's control.
- (iii) Where a company's shares are quoted and dealt in on a recognized Stock Exchange and for a short period straddling the end of an accounting period the company becomes a close company because during that period less than 35 per cent of the voting rights were held by the public.

Inspectors have been advised accordingly and instructed to submit to Head Office cases which fall into one or more of the categories set out in paragraph 4 above.

Accountant Finalists in National Management Game

UNDER the 'chairmanship' of Mr R. G. McIntosh, C.A., the team from the Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation Ltd, under the name of Ficted, won the first National Management Game at the headquarters of International Computers Ltd, in London, last Sunday. Although the Local Government Syndicate (which included several members of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants) came third in the final, it was to their credit that the contest was very closely fought. The result was Ficted, first place; Appraisals Incorporated (Parkinson Cowan Ltd), second place; and the LG Syndicate, third place.

On a comparison of accumulated net profit, the winners made £4,244,870 against £4,085,660 by Appraisals Inc., and £3,643,290 by the LG Syndicate. The final rounds were commenced in a hypothetically favourable market, but the administrator, Mr K. Williams, F.C.A., had other ideas, and decided to inform the contestants just before the final play that the market had deteriorated. This regrettably proved the undoing of the local government team who had maintained a low-price policy up to that time to compete with the higher-price policies of their competitors. The latter, however, had built up a larger buffer of liquid resources to withstand the slump more effectively, and to ensure their success, Ficted made a drastic reduction in prices and won the final.

The semi-finals had been played off on the previous day between the nine teams mentioned in The Accountant of July 9th, and it is noteworthy that the team of 'Arkle' was vested in the sole person of Mr T. Lloyd Williams, actuary of the Guardian Royal Exchange Assurance Group. Indeed, he was only narrowly defeated by Appraisals Inc., in the same semi-final round as Thomson Shepherd (Carpets) Ltd.

ICFC's entry into the final was secured by overcoming McAnally Montgomery & Co and Fisons Ltd, and in the remaining semi-final the LG Syndicate successfully competed against Hunting Associated Industries Ltd and Interman (McGraw-Hill Publicity Co Ltd).

A very pleasing ceremony followed the final competition, and was held in the theatre at the headquarters of ICL when, after decisions made by the teams during the game had been explained by their members, Sir John Wall, O.B.E., B.COM., chairman of ICL, congratulated the winners, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., J.P., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, presented a trophy to them, and Sir Gordon Newton, Editor of The Financial Times, gave each team member a scroll and a set of steak knives and forks. Each finalist, winners and runners-up, received a very sophisticated and up-to-date slide rule.

As readers of The Accountant will be aware, this was the world's first National Management Game – in no country other than the United Kingdom had such a game been played on such a scale. Sponsored by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Financial Times and ICL, it began three months ago when 243 competitors from a variety of enterprises throughout Britain were accepted from a total of 2,000 entrants. In view of its tremendous success another game will commence at the end of this year for approximately 3,000 teams in the UK, and there are plans in progress for an international game to be played.

At present, however, the 'directors' comprising the Ficted team of ICFC are 'The National Management Champions for 1970'.

Internal Auditors' Summer School

AN excellent attendance drew some commendatory remarks from Mr T. W. Scriven, A.C.I.S., West European Regional Director of The Institute of Internal Auditors, when he opened the Institute's Summer School at Clare Hall, Leicester University, on Friday of last week. He was gratified, also, that in the man's world of internal auditing there was a lady member present – Mrs A. K. Osborne, internal audit manager of Modeluxe Linen Hire Services Ltd – bringing the total number to well over 100.

Fraud prevention

The school started on a controversial note, as the first speaker, Mr A. C. Smith, C.A., chief internal auditor of Philips Electronic and Associated Industries, in a paper on 'Practical aspects – fraud prevention', expressed the view that internal auditors did not seem to regard the detection and prevention of fraud as their main duty. He cited a common reason for not dealing with the prevention of fraud as a fear that it could create an atmosphere of suspicion which might undermine company solidarity. There was considerable participation by the audience at the end of the address which gave members plenty of material for discussion at the syndicate meetings held subsequently.

Mr D. J. Dace, F.B.C.S., then spoke on 'The economics of using a computer' and his suggestions of what appraisals should be made before the recommendation of a computer installation were very well received. He emphasized that an electronic data processing system just had to be justified, it could not be compared with the purchasing of a typewriter or installing additional telephones, because the cost was so much more. So many systems could be utilized, so many different types of hardware could be purchased, and it was imperative that all these were carefully considered. Feasibility, whether technical, operational or economic, was all-important.

Various slides of charts and graphs were then shown to illustrate the information required before a decision should be taken on the inauguration of a computer system, whether by leasing, rental or purchase. Mr Dace held the view that internal auditors should be 'with it' when a new complex was proposed by management because all available information was required before a final decision could be taken on whether to go ahead with the project.

Mr S. S. Ross, a Past President of the London Chapter, then addressed the school on 'Organizing and operating an internal auditing department'. He was quite frank at the outset of his talk in admitting that there was no ultimate or single successful formula for organizing and operating an internal auditing department, although there may be guide lines along which 'one may travel with a reasonable chance of success'.

Mr Ross laid down three major considerations which might determine how an internal auditing department could be organized and to what size it could develop. These were: status, objectives, and the size and activities of the undertaking. He dealt with all these aspects in detail, and as if to answer the two previous speakers, he observed that surprise audits were inadvisable except 'when there was reason to believe theft or fraud'. In his view, they created a climate of suspicion and secretiveness when co-operation and frankness was so necessary for a successful audit.

On the subject of measuring the effectiveness of the internal audit department, Mr Ross stated that if its effectiveness was measured by the number of vouchers checked, number of recommendations made, number of audits conducted and other negative and abstract values, a profit conscious management would certainly not be impressed. A more acceptable measure would be an evaluation of the audit results in terms of reduction of costs, losses revealed, prevented and, when possible, recovered. He was not suggesting that the only criterion should be profitability, but it was an important one which was often neglected.

Concise reports

The writing of reports, in his view, had to be mentioned, and Mr Ross warned against a common tendency for them to be too lengthy; in order that the force of the content should not be weakened or distorted by a précis on the instructions of senior executives and management, they should be accurate, concise, clear, courteous and tactful. A practice much favoured was to accompany a full report by a short note highlighting the more important conclusions.

Mr F. Rigg, F.C.A., President of the London Chapter, and chief internal auditor of Taylor Woodrow Services Ltd, was the final speaker, and he was introduced by the chairman of the session, Mr F. Stanyard, D.F.C., A.I.M.T.A., A.A.C.C.A., assistant treasurer, Greater London Council. Mr Rigg's address was on two subjects: principles of flowcharting, and statistical sampling in internal auditing. He felt it essential to impress upon members and their guests that it was an excellent discipline to prepare a flowchart of an internal audit system.

He went on to say that he did not have much time for internal control questionnaires as he considered that to get to the bottom of all matters and to find out everything necessary for an audit, a flowchart was unsurpassed. It illustrated so well the various parts of a system, and how they were interlinked; furthermore, in the case of international companies, problems of language did not arise – as they would with a lengthy narrative report – as the symbols used for matter to be reviewed could be seen so readily on a chart.

On passing to his second subject, Mr Rigg stressed that a very important aspect of the work of an internal auditor, having examined the theoretical basis of a control or management information system, was to satisfy himself that the system was operating as required. Obviously it was not possible for this purpose to examine every piece of data going through the system, and the auditor had always to rely on testing some of the data. This was usually an imprecise undertaking, based on guess-work or 'judgement'; normally, the only proper conclusion he could draw related to the items in his sample, and to no others. Statistical sampling, however, was the application of mathematical probability theory to sampling.

Useful techniques

Being based on well established (and to the knowledgeable mathematician), provable rules of probability, the techniques that had been developed enabled an auditor to draw precisely defined conclusions as to the condition of all the items under review from a carefully calculated and selected sample. The most important consideration in applying mathematical theories to audit problems was that the sample should be representative of the whole: true representation of the sample must be ensured. For example, in checking invoices the internal auditor may be concerned with correctness of prices, in which case the values of invoices were important. On the other hand, he may be concerned to see that goods have been properly received, so that quantities were the important factor.

It was essential that, whatever aspect of the data was under review, every unit must have a known or equal chance of being selected. Thus it was necessary to ensure that the method of choosing the sample contained no bias or pattern to upset the randomness of the sample. Mr Rigg then proceeded to give an instructive blackboard illustration of practical sampling.

The final day was devoted to syndicates reporting on their discussions and their conclusions, and Mr Rigg made some well-chosen remarks in closing the School. He praised the education committee under the chairmanship of Mr C. Duly, M.B.E., A.A.C.C.A., for organizing so successful an occasion.

Only one event marred the very successful lecture and discussion meeting and that was the absence of the Director-at-Large of the Institute, Mr N. A. Smith, M.B.E., T.D., F.C.A., who was prevented from attending by the death of Mr Heinz Hintz, who in addition to being Mr Smith's 'No. 2' as deputy chief internal auditor of Unilever Ltd, was a Bradford Cadmus Memorial Award winner of the Institute for 1969-70, as announced in The Accountant last week.

Student Roundabout

NO TAX RELIEF FOR ARTICLED CLERKS

THE campaign conducted so vigorously by the Executive Committee of the Association of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies to obtain tax relief on articulated clerks' educational expenses met with another rebuff last week - this time from the new Chancellor.

At Parliamentary question time last Tuesday, Mr T. L. Iremonger (Cons., Ilford, North) asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to exempt from income tax the course and examination fees and cost of textbooks incurred by clerks articulated to solicitors and chartered accountants.

The reply, and supplementary questions and answers, were as follows:

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr PATRICK JENKIN): I have noted my hon friend's suggestion; but I see considerable difficulties in the way of making a special exception for articulated clerks from the general rule that the cost of acquiring professional or technical qualifications does not rank for tax relief.

Mr IREMONGER: Since these are students, why should these well-motivated and constructive students be penalized when the little 'nut cases' who 'bust up' the universities get subsidies?

Mr JENKIN: I am not sure that there is a parallel to be drawn between the two. There is a well-established tax rule that the cost of acquiring professional qualifications cannot count as part of the expense of carrying on a profession. It would be difficult to make an exception to that rule.

Mr BARNETT: Is not the expense 'wholly and necessarily incurred' in the earning of an income? Should not the hon. gentleman inform the Inland Revenue that it should allow it?

Mr JENKIN: On the contrary. I differ from the hon. member with diffidence, but this is a matter of tax, law which was decided in the Courts last year. Such a claim as this is not allowable.

PRESTON OUT OF LEAGUE CUP

IN a tense finish, The Preston and District Chartered Accountant Students' Society were defeated by only two runs in the quarter-final game in the Clitheroe Cricket League knock-out cup played on June 24th against Great Harwood Football Club for whom Bryan Douglas (ex-Blackburn and England winger) plays.

After 20 overs Great Harwood scored 56 for 9 and in the Society's 20 overs they scored 54 for 6. Needing only three runs off the last over to win, the Society could only score one. Preston's chief run-getter was John Carter with 24.

The Society has also recently played Blackburn law students in a friendly game which they won convincingly - scoring 134 for six wickets in 20 overs. The law students were dismissed for 67, David Lynch taking three wickets in his second over.

HULL AGM POSTPONED

WE have been informed that, due to circumstances beyond their control, the committee of the Chartered Accountants' Students' Society of Kingston upon Hull have had to postpone their annual general meeting due to be held on July 16th. The meeting will now take place on July 28th at the venue already announced - the Queen's Hotel, Hull, at 6.30 p.m.

Golf

The Society is holding a golf competition between members at the Hessle Golf Club on August 7th. Those interested in taking part should contact Alistair Dales, c/o Hodgson, Harris & Co, Bank Chambers, Parliament Street, Hull. Telephone 36811.

At the recent annual general meeting of the Sheffield and District Society of Chartered Accountants – reported in The Accountant of July 2nd – the Society presented a silver rose bowl to the Institute for use in Chartered Accountants' Hall. In the picture the President of the Institute, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A. (left), is shown receiving the gift from the then President of the District Society, Mr R. Firth, F.C.A. It was a unique occasion for the Society to have the President of the Institute at its annual meeting, and the newly elected Society President, Mr K. H. Glossop, F.C.A., had the unusual honour of receiving the Society's two badges of office from the retiring President and the President of the Institute.

Chartered Accountants v. Law Society

The Chartered Accountants must surely be enlarging their list of talented players, so that the earlier ambitions of forming an established club can yet be fulfilled. There was ample evidence of this in their recent annual match with the Law Society at Richmond, which they won comfortably by six wickets.

The Law Society must have felt thankful for the solid chanceless innings of 107 not out by S. R. Stowell, who withstood a variety of attack with unruffled calm.

The Accountants scored the faster, J. M. Barrie and T. J. Kendall putting them in a strong position when Kendall's wicket fell at 117. The match was won with 20 minutes to spare.

This book was first published some three years ago and has since gained wide acceptance as a guide to modern audit techniques and procedures. Now in its second edition, the book offers practical guidance, backed up by detailed questionnaires and check lists, on how an audit should be carried out under the United Kingdom Companies Acts. It also provides guidance on the additional responsibilities which arise when an auditor is reporting on the United Kingdom subsidiaries of United States or Canadian companies.

Important new features of this edition are the rewritten chapters on 'Investments', 'Taxation' and 'Auditing Procedures for Computer Applications'. Furthermore, the whole of the book has been revised so as to reflect the requirements of the Companies Act 1967, and the recent pronouncements of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

For new readers of this book it may be convenient to mention that in recent years the whole approach to auditing has changed. The old concepts of routine checking and vouching have gone and new standards are being set and new procedures evolved. This has become more than ever necessary by the increasing use of computers for which auditing techniques now have to be designed.

Taking as his starting-point the system of internal control installed by management, the auditor's task is to point out the weaknesses to his client and to make a tailor-made audit programme to fit the job in which tests of the day-to-day transactions are cut to a minimum. The auditor now observes, at regular intervals, the physical stocktaking carried out by his client's staff; if his report to shareholders is not to be qualified, he requires his client to maintain a higher standard of book-keeping and accounts than hitherto. His audit is carefully planned and is backed by a well defined system for the preparation, filing and presentation of working papers.

AUDIT CLERK

Ipswich

A large international firm of Chartered Accountants requires an Audit Clerk to work full time in Ipswich at a client's office, previously located in the City of London. Applicants must live in the Ipswich area and must have good accountancy experience.

Applications from qualified and unqualified persons will be considered. Starting salary according to qualifications and experience up to £1,500 p.a.

Please write with full details of age, education and career to date, to Box AC 12822.

Young Accountants

Thomson McLintock & Co. have vacancies for qualified accountants (and finalists with a successful examination record to date). Initially the work will be mainly auditing of a wide variety of public and private companies. There are early opportunities for experience of computers and of investigation work.

The work is demanding but is matched by above average remuneration and carefully planned training, which although geared primarily to the requirements of the man planning to remain in a practising firm, will prove valuable to the accountant moving into industry. For those interested in travelling there are opportunities overseas in our international firm after an initial period in the U.K. In the longer term the prospects for the able man to win promotion are outstanding in a rapidly expanding firm.

M. G. Adamson,
33 King William Street,
London, E.C.4.

Apart from London there are vacancies at present in our offices in Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and Sunderland. Interviews will be arranged at the office concerned.

These opportunities are for chartered accountants with a professional career in mind... We are a recently amalgamated firm of accountants — Fuller Jenks Beecroft & Company — already employing over 400 in the UK and there are 1000 in associated firms overseas.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Group Chief Accountant in South Africa

Salary £5,000 per annum

Passage fully paid

Edgars Stores Limited, South Africa's fastest growing retail chain store organisation, currently operating over 400 outlets in the clothing, footwear and furniture fields throughout Southern Africa, with a subsidiary in the United Kingdom, is seeking a Chief Accountant for the Group at their Head Office in Johannesburg.

The successful candidate will be a qualified C.A. with several years' experience in a large organisation (preferably, though not essentially, in retailing). We are, however, chiefly concerned with his managerial attitudes. He should be a tough-minded, vigorous, forward-looking individual, well-skilled in the use of integrated accounting systems to help operating managers improve their performance; and well-versed in the various applications of E.D.P. to speed up the production of meaningful management reports.

We offer:

- fully paid passages for the successful applicant and his family to South Africa;
- free accommodation for a month after arrival;
- a commencing salary in the region of £5,000 p.a.;
- excellent fringe benefits; and
- a unique opportunity to start a new life and career in this prosperous land, blessed with a wonderful, sunny climate and tremendous potential, at NO PERSONAL EXPENSE.

Short-listed applicants may be interviewed by our Chairman in the United Kingdom during July 1970.

A large number of immigrants are presently forging highly successful careers in our organisation.

Please reply IMMEDIATELY in strictest confidence, giving fullest personal career details, to:

How far can you go?

Australia is a fortunate country. It has the natural wealth of a new continent, the potential of vast space, and all the experience of Europe and America to draw on.

In this unusual combination of circumstances, the professions are given new impetus—resulting in a more than favourable atmosphere for the young qualified man with extra ambition for rapid advancement.

New South Wales is the most populous and prosperous state. Sydney is its capital, the centre for every State activity, both business and social, and supports an extremely busy and expanding practice.

To join us, we offer you an attractive starting salary, wide variety of work, and excellent opportunities to enlarge your knowledge of accountancy and management, through specialist training as well as experience.

Providing you take full advantage of the opportunities presented, Sydney will be most appreciative!

Please write for an appointment with one of our Australian partners who will be here in July and August, to: Price Waterhouse & Co., 3 Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London EC2.

DENMARK

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co invite applications from young qualified accountants for a senior position in the office of their associated firm in Copenhagen.

A good salary will be paid with pleasant working conditions and opportunities for gaining wide experience in an international practice.

Applications to the Staff Partner, 11 Ironmonger Lane, London EC2.

WEST INDIES

Pannell Fitzpatrick & Co have an opening for a newly qualified chartered accountant in their office in the Cayman Islands, British West Indies.

This is an opportunity to gain experience of all types of accounting and auditing work. There is also the opportunity to study the workings of an international tax haven.

An attractive tax-free starting salary will be paid. Tours will be for two years with two months' leave at the end thereof on full pay. Other benefits include local leave, a car and subsidised accommodation. The climate is delightful and there is every opportunity for an interesting, pleasant and healthy life.

Please write to the firm at Lee House, London Wall, London EC2 (or telephone 01-606 7051), reference GG.

Your new accountancy qualification should make all the difference...

... and provided you make the right decision on how best to reach your career objectives, it certainly will.

One of the more adventurous choices open to you, now you've passed your finals, is to join an international professional firm and work on the Continent of Europe.

You are unlikely to find a better combination of ways of moulding your professional capabilities and your personality. Real advantage for a Chartered Accountant lies in this combination, this blend of professional and personal development in an unfamiliar environment.

You will acquire comprehensive audit experience on examinations of subsidiaries of US and UK companies. The chance of early promotion completes a picture worth careful consideration.

When you take a special challenge, you expect a special reward. We—and Europe—have everything to offer, on both counts.

Please write for an application form to C.J. Daintree, European Staff Partner, Price Waterhouse & Co., 47, Avenue de l'Opera, Paris 2ème.

Two Chartered Accountants Istanbul

Due to continued growth, a well established English firm of Chartered Accountants wishes to appoint a qualified man who will combine management consultancy assignments with customary professional work. Another qualified man will be appointed as an audit supervisor.

In both cases, the age range envisaged is 25-35.

The first position will appeal to those who have obtained about 5 years' post qualification experience in industry, commerce or the profession. In the last mentioned, the experience should have been broadly based.

The audit supervisor may confidently expect to obtain excellent international experience in a pleasant climate and surroundings.

Remuneration will certainly reflect the level of these appointments. It will enable a family man to live at a standard appropriate to an expatriate professional person in this locality and provide adequate savings. The initial contract will be for 2 years with free passages; one month's home leave per year plus local leave.

Please write briefly, and confidentially, stating the position that interests you, to P. J. G. Rolandi, Ref. F 200.

GO WEST (OR EAST) YOUNG MAN

When, in the good (or bad) old days of National Service, one reported as a newly-fledged subaltern to the regimental depot, the following conversation often occurred.

ELDERLY SUPERANNUATED MAJOR - 'Welcome to the mess, m'boy. Have a large pink gin. Now you're going out to the 2nd battalion in Hong Kong (or wherever). Don't worry about the language problem. There are only two phrases you'll ever need in any foreign tongue. They are (a) "My friend will pay", and (b) "Take all your clothes off". - Not you, you fool! Have another gin'.

Times may have altered since then, but the same basic principle still applies. Knowledge of the relevant language is not essential, since tuition will be given.

As a newly qualified Chartered Accountant, an overseas tour must have a tremendous appeal. An enormous salary (tax-free in most cases), a fantastic standard of living, life in the sun, a chance to accumulate capital (if you're careful) and, most important, a significant stepping-stone in your career.

When you return to the U.K., a prospective employer is far more likely to give preference to somebody with overseas experience than to one who has followed the conventional and stereotyped path after qualifying. You will have showed initiative, confidence, and a mind of your own.

We have client firms with seats to be filled from Alaska to Adelaide and from Singapore to Seattle.

Why not give us a ring and find out?

GOVERNMENT ENTERPRISE

A COMPARATIVE STUDY

Edited by

and J. F. GARNER, LL.D.

Government participation in business and industry is increasing and this book is an explanation of the legal framework in which this development is taking place. It covers many different jurisdictions and emphasis throughout is on the comparative method: the book concludes with a critical analysis. Most of the countries of the Western European tradition are covered fully, including the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, the United States, Canada and Australia and there are also contributions from other countries including Sweden, Israel and East Africa.

INSTALMENT CREDIT

Edited and with an introduction by

AUBREY L. DIAMOND, LL.M.(Lond.)

The core of the instalment credit problem is this: how can due payment best be enforced, and can extra money be received to cover the cost of giving credit and the risks of loss? When these practical economic questions are settled, the legal questions must be considered. What form shall the transaction take? What are the parties' rights and against whom? Are legal controls necessary, and if so how should they be formulated? Instalment Credit discusses the questions which face all those persons actively concerned in the finance and practice of hire-purchase today, and focuses attention on the archaic legal structure which seriously impedes the conduct of normal business transactions by finance companies.

CHARITY NEEDS YOUR HELP — YOU NEED OURS MORE THAN TWO MILLION POUNDS A YEAR ARE DISTRIBUTED TO CHARITY THROUGH THE

The National Council of Social Service

More and more Solicitors and Accountants are advising their clients to seek our help (and are doing so themselves).

More and more individuals, firms, companies and trusts are using our services.

A single discretionary deed of covenant with C.A.F. enables the donor - individual or company - at his continuing discretion to make all his donations to charity with the benefit of Income Tax which has been recovered in advance by the Fund. He gains discretion, flexibility, administrative convenience and a greatly extended field of untaxed giving to charity.

The Fund also administers charitable gifts, bequests and trusts and will distribute any funds large or small to any charitable object. In addition it acts as the agent of many individual charities in the collection of their covenanted income.

C.A.F. is a registered Charity and a registered Friendly Society, and normally makes no charge for its services but requests that a small percentage be allocated to its parent body, the National Council of Social Service.

Young Qualified Accountants

£2,000 - plus - - - - plus

One of the oldest Chartered firms (Holborn) with enthusiastic partners of forward-thinking attitude has reached an exciting phase of progressive development (and international ramification).

More potential manager and partner material is sought - assignments often intriguing and future prospects wonderful.

Applicants should have ambition and be ready for hard work - must possess ability, initiative, good personality. They will state commencing salary they believe is merited - the prospect of receiving it from the advertisers now or quickly is real. Regular salary reviews and recognition of good work.

Usual information please in confidence to Box YQ 12659.

Continental Europe

Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co have vacancies for Accountants, recently qualified or with post-qualification experience, in their offices in BARCELONA, BRUSSELS, DUSSELDORF, MADRID and PARIS. The work in these offices is varied and interesting and provides good experience in British, American and Continental accounting and auditing procedures. There are excellent opportunities for those who wish to make their careers on the continent.

Present knowledge of the relevant language is not essential.

Definite Career Prospects !! ?

NEWLY QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS AND FINALISTS! Having read some of the countless advertisements offering outstanding career opportunities both home and overseas it is possible you are becoming a little confused as to what is the right job for you and the best course of action to take - is it -

- (a) A short-term overseas contract with tax-free salary offering capital accumulation, etc.?
- (b) To remain in Public Practice to obtain valuable post-qualification experience?
- (c) Enter commerce or industry to acquire experience in the latest modern accounting techniques - management accounting - computer application - D.C.F. - and statistical sampling, etc.?
- (d) Specialisation?

Surely the answer must be based from the long-term viewpoint. For example, what is your position on returning to this country after a tour abroad? Are your attainments considered by your employers to be as good as your colleagues who have remained in this country? Does specialisation provide opportunities for Controllorship or General Management? These and many similar questions need answering before attending interviews. Bartons do not pretend to know all the answers but they are able to offer an excellent record of many years of experience in finding the right job for accountants and in helping to crystallise ideas into definite career patterns. Therefore, whether you are seeking a new appointment or just advice why not call, telephone or write - our service is free and strictly confidential.

WHY AS A YOUNG ACCOUNTANT, YOU SHOULD TALK TO HARRISON & WILLIS ABOUT YOUR CAREER

Well, we have been established over ten years now, and our consultants have many years' experience in the accountancy recruitment field – so not surprisingly we have established very strong connections with many leading industrial and commercial companies and firms in Public Practice, as well as with many smaller, enterprising organisations. Additionally we can and will offer sound, well-informed advice based on the experience we have gained through talking to and introducing to new appointments accountants, auditors and tax staff.

OUR COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL DIVISION is currently handling a large number of assignments for client companies in LONDON, THE PROVINCES and OVERSEAS for whom we are recruiting qualified accountants, student accountants and experienced un-qualified accountants at the £1,700 to £4,000 levels. Your contacts: Charles Pearce or Maxwell Yule.

OUR PUBLIC PRACTICE DIVISION (U.K. DEPARTMENT) is in constant contact with the leading firms in LONDON and THE PROVINCES and is currently recruiting for these clients the following personnel AUDIT SENIORS, AUDIT MANAGERS, TAXATION STAFF (all grades) and SEMI-SENIORS.

Your contacts: Michael Green or Miss V. Moore.

PUBLIC PRACTICE DIVISION (INTERNATIONAL DEPARTMENT). If you are contemplating an overseas tour (or would like to discuss the opportunities open to you overseas) then we'd advise you to contact MR GABRIEL DUFFY – He knows the market and can give you the benefit of seasoned and unbiased advice – and if you wish will set up an interview programme for you.

Taxation Specialist

An unusual opportunity arises from the setting up in London of a separate research and planning department for taxation and estate duty by an International firm of Chartered Accountants. This is the opportunity for a taxation specialist to show his ability in a stimulating office. It would particularly suit a barrister well versed in taxation. The salary will be high and commensurate with the ability of the man selected.

Please write with full details of experience and personal particulars to D. I. Main, Pannell Fitzpatrick & Co, Lee House, London Wall, London EC2.

TAX CONSULTANT CITY OF LONDON

The City Office of an International firm of Chartered Accountants is seeking a qualified taxation specialist of the highest calibre whose duties will include advising the partners on taxation aspects of major clients. Experience of international tax, mergers and flotations is essential. This position offers a real challenge, with commensurate opportunities to the successful applicant, and it is unlikely that anyone currently earning less than £6,000 p.a. would be suitable.
– Apply Box TC 12754.

PROFESSIONAL — EXPANSION

Kidsons have a requirement for further Chartered and Certified Accountants to join them in London, Birmingham, Manchester, Yorkshire, and East Anglia.

Our Group of practices provides:

Varied and interesting work with progressive levels of responsibility.

Improved remuneration with reviews for merit and market rates.

Work in an energetic but personal atmosphere where the progress of the individual is of major importance.

Young Accountants

Thomson McLintock & Co. have vacancies for qualified accountants (and finalists with a successful examination record to date). Initially the work will be mainly auditing of a wide variety of public and private companies. There are early opportunities for experience of computers and of investigation work.

The work is demanding but is matched by above average remuneration and carefully planned training, which although geared primarily to the requirements of the man planning to remain in a practising firm, will prove valuable to the accountant moving into industry. For those interested in travelling there are opportunities overseas in our international firm after an initial period in the U.K. In the longer term the prospects for the able man to win promotion are outstanding in a rapidly expanding firm.

Write, giving brief career details, to:—

M. G. Adamson,
33 King William Street,
London, E.C.4.

Apart from London there are vacancies at present in our offices in Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and Sunderland. Interviews will be arranged at the office concerned.

Ours is a long tradition.

Of new ideas

That's why we need young accountants who can use their initiative and judgement. They have to meet and deal with new people at all levels, often using their understanding of modern management methods.

We have a planned training programme to put over our audit methods, after which they get the chance to work on investigations or with computers, or travel abroad.

Wherever young finalists and accountants live in the United Kingdom, Cooper Brothers can offer them this wealth of opportunity. And we're quick to spot real talent and promote them to greater responsibility.

So write to the Staff Partner at 33 Gutter Lane, London EC2 and tell him where you would like to join us—London, The Midlands, The North Country, The West Country, Wales or Scotland.

CHALLENGING OPPORTUNITIES

FOR AMBITIOUS YOUNG QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS AND FINALISTS

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., an international firm of accountants with a wide variety of assignments, have vacancies in their London office for young qualified accountants—Chartered, Certified or Municipal Treasurers—and finalists seeking progressive experience and training to fit themselves for a career in practice or industry. We offer

- Comprehensive training courses covering all aspects of our practice including the application of modern auditing techniques to EDP and advanced accounting systems, taxation and investigation work.
- Rapid promotion to those able and willing to accept increasing responsibility.
- Excellent prospects for a rewarding career in practice for those with the necessary talents.
- Openings for those who wish to specialise in computer auditing, taxation or management consultancy.
- Opportunities both for working abroad on short term assignments and for transfers to one of our overseas offices.

Please write in confidence to J. B. Barton, Staff Partner, 11 Ironmonger Lane, London, E.C.2., giving brief details of your career so far.

YOUNG CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

(Qualified or Finalists)

Arthur Andersen was a prominent figure in updating accounting thought and service. As a result, the organization that bears his name has expanded rapidly and now enjoys a world-wide reputation for progressive leadership and employee training. Its London office now needs young and ambitious businessmen (in their early 20's) to join their Audit and Taxation divisions.

Training: A second to none internal programme. This year, the introductory three-week course is being held near Paris.

Prospects: You'll have early responsibility and should reach manager status after 3 years, when you'll be earning at least £3,750. Another 8 years and you may be offered a partnership—a large number of the partners are in their thirties.

Interested? Then write now to the firm for more detailed information, for the attention of: David Steele, St. Alphage House, 2, Fore Street, London, E.C.2.

WHERE THERE'S GROWTH THERE'S OPPORTUNITY.

I Was Newly Qualified Once

When I completed my Articles I wanted advice on what I should do next and what salary I was worth.

I went to all sorts of advisers. Each advised differently and I was even more confused, so I decided to meet as many firms as possible and four agencies arranged over 12 interviews for me.

Before each interview I asked the agents to tell me about each firm. Apart from the address (and one got that wrong) they knew very little.

Still I did the round and I was offered 11 jobs. Good — not really. Only 2 firms were suitable for me and the other 10 interviews were a waste of everybody's time.

You can use this indiscriminate method or you can seek our advice — we personally vet each appointment, thus ensuring that only pertinent introductions are arranged.

Head of the Department of Management Studies

Letchworth College of Technology

Between 1951 and 1965 in nearly every year more than 20 per cent of young people went into clerical work. This is one of the cogent reasons for reviewing the management of our offices and the men and women who staff them.

Are our offices as effective as they could be? What is the real cost of providing office services? What is the calibre of the newcomers? How does one select them? How are they trained? What job satisfactions do they get? How can ability be recognized and rewarded?

The coming into force of the Offices, Shops and Railways Premises Act 1963 has led to a re-examination of working conditions. The implementation of the Industrial Training Act 1964 is likely to become an important issue. The selective employment tax has reinforced the need to examine costs and efficiency.

Similarly, the tempo of the revolution in the quality and quantity of information data and its processing poses equally urgent questions.

Here is a book which reviews all these problems. The author writes from a background of many years in offices and as many in professional, commercial and office education. Above all, he is concerned with the human beings at the desk and the machine.

His book will provide managerial and supervisory staff with stimulating leads on the human side of office management. Students preparing for the examinations of The Chartered Institute of Secretaries, The Institute of Office Management, The Corporation of Secretaries, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, and the relevant subjects of business or management diplomas in colleges will find that it contains a wealth of information attractively introduced. It is a book for the library of every training and personnel department and it complements the same author's Business Administration and Management.

Oooooops!

Householders' policies have never covered accidental damage of this kind.

Until now.

From June 16th, Zurich are offering a Family Possessions policy which does.

It is written in plain English, which makes its unique benefits perfectly clear.

Clothes are now protected against cigarette burns and protruding nails.

China and glass can shatter on the floor without shattering bank balances in the process.

Cups of Turkish coffee can seep stickily into the new white Wilton without plunging the owner too deeply into despair.

This policy will naturally require slightly higher premiums.

There will be a £2 10s. excess clause on clothes, and £5 on household goods. (There will be no excess on valuables.) These apart, the policyholder's chattels will be protected as they have never been before.

You may well feel that your clients should know about this new policy just as fast as possible.

Drop us a line, and we'll gladly send you full details.

Mergers and the Public

IN few areas of the economy was the late Government's inclination to intervene more in evidence than in the field of industrial mergers. The new Conservative administration will doubtless view such matters somewhat differently, but it will be surprising if it abdicates the powers to intervene which the Labour Government built up in recent years.

Traditional economic thinking dies hard. Hence, generally speaking, most politicians would agree that mergers are justified if they produce economies of scale, but harmful if they increase monopoly power. Given that the public interest may be served best by competition between producers, it can be argued that the logical role for any Government to play in the industrial sector of the economy is to ensure conditions which will stimulate the forces of competition.

Such may be the conclusions to be drawn from the economics textbook, but the reality is somewhat different. In industry, as in other areas, God is on the side of the big battalions. In recent decades industrial undertakings have, through mergers and take-overs, increased their size and scale to the point where the vast majority of industries are dominated by a handful of firms. Oligopoly rather than pure monopoly is the outstanding characteristic of the private industrial sector. This trend has been increasingly evident in recent years, and not merely have there been both vertical and horizontal mergers in major industries, but the conglomerate now tends to extend across a number of industrial frontiers.

In a new Hobart Paper entitled Industrial Merger and Public Policy (Institute of Economic Affairs, price 8s), Dr Brian Hindley, of the London School of Economics, questions the justification for Government intervention in mergers. Why, he asks, do firms need the inducements offered by the Industrial Reorganization Corporation before they merge? If such mergers are likely to achieve a high rate of return on capital, then it is surely reasonable to assume that the owners themselves will seek to maximize their profits in this way. As Dr Hindley reasonably observes, 'the existence of the IRC must therefore be predicated on the belief that firms will not be operated in their owners' interests', or that 'their owners and managers are stupid and do not recognize their own interests'.

The case for Government intervention is self-evident when private and public interests conflict but, as Dr Hindley points out, where this situation does not arise, intervention must be justified mainly on the grounds that private business cannot be relied upon to ensure that its resources are efficiently used. In other words 'managers and owners of firms do not recognize their interests as clearly as do those with official status, or they are less capable of seeing the best way to realize them'.

The solution to the misuse or inefficient use of resources by firms, argues Dr Hindley, is to allow other firms and managers who believe they can make more effective use thereof to acquire what could, in such circumstances, be a profitable investment. If this is indeed the case, then it does not need Whitehall's intervention. Unfortunately, once created, a body such as the IRC has a vested interest in seeking to justify its existence or, as Dr Hindley puts it, 'it has an incentive to appear active and vigorous, even where action and vigour on its part are not appropriate from the economy's point of view'.

A knowledge of human nature and experience with Government agencies lends some support to Dr Hindley's thesis. On the other hand, to the extent that this rests on the assumption that the forces of the market place work smoothly, some measure of external supervision may still be required. As is usually the case, the question concerns the degree and form of the Government's intervention rather than its justification.

Educating Professional Managers

IN a leading article in The Accountant of January 15th we discussed the Mant Report entitled The Experienced Manager (published by the British Institute of Management) and commented on the exclusion of any serious consideration of the problems of educating accountants. Yet accountants provide a high proportion of managers and senior executives in industry; accountants are in great demand from industry, and their qualifications still represent a high recommendation for ultimate achievement of top management status.

Now we have the Rose Report which surveys the provision of management courses and the demand for them and which discusses some issues involved in the problems of providing for an expanding management education system. Professor Rose epitomizes 'the new wave' of management education. He is a respectable academic in his own field and he is a leading professor at the London Business School. Moreover, he was commissioned to undertake this study by NEDO.

His report is a thorough study: it provides the best information we have had so far on the extent of management education provision in the UK and provides predictions which indicate all-round expansion. By 1971 the London and Manchester Business Schools are expected to double their present capacity to about 300 places each. Overall a 50 to 60 per cent increase in the number of available places for students is expected by 1971-72 over 1968-69.

The report states that there are some 50 students studying for Ph.D.s, mostly in the field of operational research at the moment. Yet the doctoral programme should be a significant source of teachers in business and management and even if only one-quarter of British full-time management teachers possess a doctoral degree in ten years' time this would require an average annual output over the next ten years of nearly 70. This means that there should be a doctoral student population of around 300 to 400 men in the late 1970s against today's mere 50. If expansion of management education is to be accompanied by a maintenance or rise of the academic level achieved, then the development of an adequate supply of competent teachers is crucial to the whole operation.

These facts are useful in delineating the quantitative aspects of the British efforts to educate its managers more in line with the requirements of modern business. Yet the report has little to say on the qualitative aspects and indeed it suffers from some fatal flaws, especially in the way that Professor Rose has chosen to interpret his terms of reference.

In fact, the report is a persuasive plea for the new business schools. Professor Rose quite rightly argues in favour of a clearer delineation of the respective roles of the polytechnics, the universities, the consultants and the business schools in the field of management education. But he does not discuss with any rigour the fundamental problem of management education which is the combining of rigorous theory with practical significance: this is a problem which concerns the Americans as much as it does the British. As Professor Rose observes, up to 1960, British industry had generally preferred to recruit its managers from the professionally trained accountant, engineer and chemist, whereas American industry developed more broadly-based undergraduate courses for the equivalent men.

Professor Rose points out that most British commentators have underestimated the importance of professional education as a substitute for university education and they have also underestimated the importance of the broad provision of business studies in the American universities. Yet he fails to bring these facts together and to recognize that the main problem facing British business education is the broadening of professional training, the inclusion of basic subjects such as economics, accounting, and human engineering in professional courses, the strengthening of the provision of these courses in our academic institutions and the up-grading of those institutions – particularly the technical colleges and polytechnics – to university standards.

Indeed, Professor Rose lists 13 professional bodies concerned with management education in 1968–69 which between them have a membership of more than 200,000, of whom some 77,000 are chartered, certified or cost and works accountants. Yet he contents himself with a statement that ‘the educational activities of most professional bodies are likely to continue to grow.’ In 1968–69, Professor Rose states that there were some 500,000 students on degree courses in management or business studies in the US, compared with some 2,400 students in the United Kingdom, but elsewhere in his report he makes the point that comparisons of this kind are misleading.

Our guess is that the number of students studying for professional qualifications is probably two or three times the number of members of those institutions and this would indicate that there may be something of the order of half a million students undertaking professional training in the United Kingdom. If this is so, then the level of educational activity is rather higher in England than in the United States, proportionately!

A bolder conception of the true extent of education for management, which included the professions, might have led Professor Rose to identify the need to integrate professional education for business and management firmly into the higher education system in the United Kingdom. This is the essential prerequisite to the professional approach to management in the United States. It is a development much to be desired in the United Kingdom.

Unfortunately, for all his sterling work, Professor Rose does not have this underlying breadth of conception. He begins by excluding the professional field from consideration; he then goes on to define the role of the technical colleges in a rather narrow sense as being to cater for post-experience courses, and he then reserves for the universities and the business schools the activities of research and teaching in an atmosphere of intellectual inquiry and academic controversy. True, he concedes that there is common ground between the colleges and university centres and allows that the college sector should maintain ‘a base of undergraduate or postgraduate teaching’, but he deplores any desire on their part to expand their activities to any considerable extent.

The old-fashioned view of organizing is that people decide on their goals and then decide how to achieve them. Current theorists are now suggesting that the process works the other way around, organizations look at what they have done and then state their goals in the form of a summary of their previous actions. If the Rose report is looked at in this way then it is, indeed, a statement of what has happened in the last decade in British management education. Expansion has taken place and two new business schools have been formed with the aim of setting new standards of excellence. But if it is looked at in the old-fashioned way, as an attempt to define the goals that management education must seek to achieve in the future, then the report is disappointing. It fails most where it might have been expected to achieve most: in providing a conceptual framework for future developments.

If this is so, what will be the impact of the Rose report? Firstly, it will not affect the development of professional education which lies in the hands of the professional bodies. These, however slowly, are moving in the right direction in seeking more effective provision of education for their students. The polytechnics and colleges of further education have recognized the importance of awarding degrees for their courses. CNAAB may prefer the wrong kind of course, but in the long run it can be expected that more and more students will obtain a first degree before completing their professional qualifications.

Whilst these colleges will continue to provide post-experience courses, they will in time realize that these should not be mere fund-raising exercises (as Professor Rose appears to suggest they should continue to be), and colleges will begin to pioneer new forms of part-time qualifications for first and higher degrees which will eventually enable serving managers to pursue integrated courses which will also carry with them their appropriate status. The further education system can also be expected to develop a more satisfactory scheme of recognition of courses undertaken in different institutions along the lines of the American credit system. Local authorities, perhaps prompted by central government, will eventually concede greater facilities to their own local colleges so that research is undertaken and academic standards rise.

The universities can be expected to expand their business studies departments at a slower rate since the funds provided by UGC are likely to be far less than the demand would warrant. Universities will balance the need for management and business education against the traditional subjects which they offer.

One would hope that the business schools would recognize the logic of Professor's Rose's report rather than the conclusions he draws and shift their efforts away from the production of MBAs towards the production of qualified teachers with Ph.D.s. This would make the best contribution to the development of higher business education.

VANDERVELL TRUSTEES CASE

Inland Revenue as a Third Party

IN 1958 the late Mr Guy Anthony Vandervell decided to give £150,000 to the Royal College of Surgeons to found a Chair of Pharmacology. On the advice of his accountant he adopted a scheme under which he should make over to the college 100,000 shares in his company, which could then pay dividends to provide the college with £150,000. Later he was advised that the college should give an option on the shares to Vandervell Trustees Ltd which was the trustee of (inter alia) a children's settlement made by the appellant.

Dividends were paid to the college but the Inland Revenue made surtax assessments on Mr Vandervell in respect of them for 1958-59 and 1959-60 in the amounts of £162,500 and £87,500 respectively. They did so on the footing that sections 404 and 415 of the Income Tax Act 1952 applied to the scheme. After a good deal of litigation, the House of Lords upheld the assessment on the ground that Vandervell Trustees Ltd held the option (which it exercised in 1961) upon trust for Mr Vandervell beneficially (45 ATC 394). During the course of the tax proceedings, in 1965, Mr Vandervell executed a deed intended to transfer to Vandervell Trustees Ltd, upon trust for the children's settlement, any such interest as he might be held to have retained. Further dividends were paid on the shares between 1961 and 1965.

Mr Vandervell died in 1967 and the Inland Revenue, on the strength of the House of Lords' decision, assessed his executors for surtax in respect of those dividends. The executors appealed, but the appeal, by agreement with the Inland Revenue, was stood over pending the determination of proceedings begun by the executors by originating summons in May 1968. In these they claimed as against Vandervell Trustees Ltd, that the estate was entitled to the dividends received by Vandervell Trustees Ltd between 1961 and 1965.

In October 1968 the executors obtained leave from a Chancery Master to join the Inland Revenue as second defendants to the originating summons against Vandervell Trustees Ltd. The Inland Revenue consented to be joined, but Vandervell Trustees Ltd objected. Buckley, J, acceded to the trustees' application to have the Inland Revenue struck out. The executors appealed to the Court of Appeal who ordered that the Inland Revenue be added as a party in order that the issue whether the dividends belonged to the executors (thereby involving liability to surtax) or to the trustees might be 'effectively and completely' determined by a decision binding on the Inland Revenue. Vandervell Trustees Ltd successfully appealed against this to the House of Lords.

Lord Wilberforce said that if the executors succeeded in their claim, their assessment to surtax would inevitably stand. But the real difficulty of their situation was that even if they lost against the trustees and the Revenue were not bound by the decision, the executors would still have to defend themselves against the assessment and were at risk of being liable to a large sum of surtax without having the dividends. It was to prevent that happening that they wished to join the Inland Revenue in the action so that the Inland Revenue would be bound by the outcome.

The trustees argued that the High Court had no jurisdiction to join the Inland Revenue. Issues arising between a taxpayer and the Crown, forming a basis for tax assessments, were solely for the Special Commissioners to decide and were not justiciable by the Court. Lord Wilberforce said that there was nothing in tax legislation to justify that argument. However, although the Court had jurisdiction to join the Revenue, the Supreme Court rules did not enable this to be done in this particular case.

Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest said the rules provided that the Court could order a joinder of 'any person . . . whose presence before the Court is necessary to ensure that all matters in dispute in the cause or matter may be effectually and completely determined and adjudicated upon'. Lord Morris said the presence of the Revenue was not 'necessary' in the present case. No question of Revenue law was raised in the action. The Inland Revenue did not assert any claim to the dividends in question, nor did they seek relief against either party. They did not seek to be joined.

Current Affairs

Untimely Death of Iain Macleod

THE sudden death earlier this week of the Rt Hon. Iain Macleod, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is a tragic loss to the Government, to Parliament, and to the whole country. Mr Macleod's last appearance in the Commons was on July 7th, when he took a leading part in the economic affairs debate although in considerable pain. Later that evening he was admitted to hospital, where an emergency operation was performed for acute appendicitis. He had left the hospital last Sunday, and appeared to be making a good recovery.

Apart from personal considerations, the necessity of finding a new Chancellor so early in the Government's term of office must present Mr Heath with a major political problem. Mr Maurice Macmillan, as Chief Secretary to the Treasury, has deputized for Mr Macleod during his illness; but at the moment of writing the choice of a permanent successor is not clear. Amongst the names mentioned in this context are Mr Reginald Maudling, Sir Keith Joseph, and Mr Anthony Barber. In any event, a reshuffle of the present Cabinet becomes almost inevitable.

Mr Macleod graduated from Cambridge in 1935, and entered politics after war service, when in 1945 he unsuccessfully contested the Western Isles constituency. In 1950 he was returned as the Conservative member for Enfield West, and held the seat for the rest of his life. His majority at last month's General Election was 11,962.

As reported in The Accountant on June 25th, Mr Macleod's appointment as Chancellor came as no surprise. His passing, before he had been fully able to apply his great talents to today's burdens of Treasury office, is the more untimely.

The Institute's Final Examinations

OF the 6,091 candidates who sat for the May Final examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 2,909 (47.75 per cent) passed and 3,182 failed.

Three candidates (20 per cent) passed in Parts I and II together out of 15 who sat. In Part I there were 3,147 candidates, of whom 1,496 (47.5 per cent) were successful and 1,651 failed. The First Place in Order of Merit and the Robert Fletcher Prize were won by Mr Shivdas Ramesh Balsekar, of London, and Second Place in Order of Merit and the Walter Knox Scholarship were won by Mr W. A. K. Warnock, also of London. Third Place in Order of Merit and the O. C. Railton Prize were awarded to Mr R. J. Groom, of Bristol.

In Part II of the examination there were 2,929 candidates, of whom 1,410 (48.1 per cent) passed and 1,519 failed. First place in order of merit, the W. B. Peat Medal and Prize, and the Frederick Whinney Prize were won by Mr M. J. Bryars, of Sheffield. Second Place in Order of Merit and the Charles M. Strachan Prize were won by Mr J. M. S. Walter, of London; and the Howitt Prize and the Deloitte-Plender Prize for the Paper on Advanced Accounting III were won by Mr R. F. Collingwood, also of London.

A full list of successful candidates and a summary of the complete results are published as a supplement to this issue.

Investment Grants Decision

UNDER the Industrial Development Act 1966, the Minister of Technology has an unqualified discretion to make or refuse investment grants towards capital expenditure incurred by industrialists in providing new machinery or plant for carrying on a 'qualifying industrial process'. Last week the House of Lords dismissed the appeal of the British Oxygen Co Ltd from a similar decision in the Court of Appeal (British Oxygen Co Ltd v. Board of Trade (48 ATC 6)).

Lord Reid said that the Act had clearly laid down the conditions for eligibility for grants and given the Minister a discretion so that he was not bound to pay grants to every person who was eligible to receive one. But his lordship could find nothing to guide the Minister as to the circumstances in which he should or should not pay grants to such persons. Section 12 provided for an annual report to Parliament so that Parliament could ex post facto consider the way in which the discretion had been exercised. If the Minister, acting on behalf of the Government, should decide not to give grants in respect of certain kinds of expenditure, there was nothing to prevent him. He could be attacked only on two general grounds: either that the discretion was exercised in bad faith or that it was exercised so unreasonably as to show that there could not have been any real or genuine exercise of the discretion.

The order of the Court of Appeal was, however, varied in relation to the small gas cylinders purchased by the company for receiving gas when it was manufactured or for storing it. It was held that when a gas cylinder is used to receive the gas, as and when it is manufactured, such cylinder is used for carrying on a process incidental to the making of the gas within section 1 (2) (a) of the Act. Moreover, storage in the cylinder qualified as '(b) The storage in the course of the business of anything . . . which . . . has resulted from any . . . process' [for the making of any article] 'carried on in the course of that business;' within section 1 (3) (b) of the Act.

It was held that the Minister had power to make grants in respect of cylinders in so far as they were used for a qualifying process, and could apportion the capital expenditure by reference to the extent of that use. The House affirmed the Court of Appeal's decision that equipment used in tankers and trailers (including hydrogen cylinders and tanks) was ineligible for grants in that it formed part of a 'vehicle' and therefore did not fall within the definition of 'machinery or plant' in section 13 (1) of the Act.

The company was ordered to pay three-quarters of the Minister's costs in the House of Lords' proceedings.

South African View of Integration

MEMBERS of the English and Scottish Institutes of Chartered Accountants working in South Africa are eligible for admission to one of the South African societies of chartered accountants, upon proof of their United Kingdom qualification and subject to passing a special examination in South African law.

In a letter published on another page, Mr H. O. H. Coulson, F.C.A., draws attention to a recent announcement in The South African Chartered Accountant as to the future operation of this concession. If integration of the United Kingdom profession becomes effective, persons entering South Africa as 'chartered accountants' will not be eligible for local membership without further inquiry as to how their United Kingdom qualification was acquired. In particular, the South African societies will not admit on the present basis any person who has not passed the final examination of one of the United Kingdom institutes, and who has not served articles.

South Africa is one of several overseas countries where proof of membership of a United Kingdom Institute has hitherto been an acceptable qualification for local accreditation.

From Facts to Fortunes

GUESS-WORK and intuition are poor substitutes for informed decisions based upon fact and upon a proper understanding of elementary accounting terminology. This is the message of the latest publication from the Distributive Trades EDC, From Facts to Fortunes, available from HM Stationery Office at 10s.

Designed as a guide to better profits for the independent small shopkeeper, the book takes the form of an illustrated dialogue between Mr Brown, the shopkeeper, and Mr Black, his accountant. It stresses the importance of proper record-keeping and comparisons; explains the significance of such items as gross profit, mark-ups, and stock turnover; demolishes the fallacy of attempting to gauge the trend of results from the cash balance; and examines the effects of such ostensible aids to profitability as free delivery services, trading stamps, bulk buying, and prompt-payment discounts.

This is a book which accountants may usefully recommend to their small shopkeeper clients, and even read themselves. The proof of the pudding lies in its eating, and whereas the first page of the text shows Mr Brown thinking that he might be better off working for somebody else, in the final illustration he is laughing all the way to the bank. One hopes that the wise advice of Mr Black in this connection has been suitably recompensed.

The contributions of Mr Brown and Mr Black to their dialogue are set out in inks of appropriate tint. The former is an infuriating and actively painful colour to read by artificial light, and it is fortunate from this point of view that, perhaps atypically, the accountant does most of the talking.

Pergamon Directors Criticized

THE appeal by Mr Robert Maxwell and two of his former co-directors of Pergamon Press Ltd (Mr C. T. Clark, F.C.A., and Mr E. S. Street) against the judgment of Plowman, J, was dismissed last week. As reported in The Accountant for April 9th, 16th, and 30th, the judge had ruled that Mr Maxwell and his co-defendants were unjustified in their refusal to answer questions put by Mr Owen Stable, Q.C., and Mr (now Sir) Ronald Leach, C.B.E., F.C.A., on behalf of the Board of Trade, and were not entitled to bind the Inspectors as to their procedure.

In a strongly-worded judgment, Lord Denning, MR, said that the Inspectors had acted perfectly properly, and that the appellants had 'no colour of right' to the assurances which they had demanded. The judge had been 'merciful' in merely ordering them to pay the costs of their application, and if they should again take such unwarranted points they would be dealt with as for contempt of Court. The Inspectors 'should proceed with the utmost expedition and brook no further delay'. Sachs and Buckley, LJJ, concurred.

The Court also held that Inspectors must remain masters of their own procedure, subject only to fairness. They must be able to report with courage and frankness, keeping nothing back, and their report was protected by absolute privilege. It is believed that this is the first occasion in 120 years that the investigatory powers of the Board of Trade have been examined by the Courts.

Structure of British Industry

BBRITISH industry in general does not suffer from structural defects. This conclusion is reached in a recent paper, The Structure and Efficiency of British Industry, published by the Industrial Policy Group.

The group finds that the unsatisfactory level of output per man in Britain today is 'a proper cause for continuing anxiety'. A common argument, which has had some influence on Government policies, is that the structure of British industry (that is, the size and form of industrial companies) is in some way defective, and that other countries with a better industrial record than Britain do not suffer from such disabilities.

Basing its case firmly upon statistical evidence from the United States, West Germany, Japan, and elsewhere, the paper rejects this hypothesis, and finds no significant feature of the British industrial structure to explain why productivity has not risen faster in recent years. It dismisses the theory of an 'optimum' size of firm, and argues for a proper balance of firms of different size linked together organically: it is the optimum distribution of size that counts.

For the future, the group believes that changes in the structure of industry are best left to work themselves out in an environment of competition and market forces. It should be the function of Government to maintain a generally competitive environment, and to intervene only where market forces are apparently not producing the desired ends. Further papers on industrial policy are to be published over the next few months.

More Bankruptcies in 1970

THE view is often expressed that the prevailing credit squeeze has made it increasingly difficult for many traders to meet their obligations. Evidence for this may, perhaps, be seen in figures recently issued by Trade Indemnity Ltd; according to this

THIS IS MY LIFE

Passing the Buck

by An Industrious Accountant

IT was an embarrassing board meeting. The directors were angry and suspicious; the staff whom they questioned were defensive and jittery; the answers were unsatisfactory. One thing only was certain: it had been the worst year's trading for years past.

The first half of the financial year had been disappointing, but we'd hoped that the second would have made up for it. True, like most firms in the distributive trade whose opening stocks, purchases, and sales may be taken as correct, we depended for our gross profit on the magnitude of the closing stocks. Again, like most of our competitors, we did a 100 per cent stock check at the financial year-end only, relying on a few ad hoc checks over the intervening months to ensure that trends were as expected.

We'd been living in a fool's paradise. The year-end stock figures were incredibly low.

The managing director summed it up curtly. Sales were generally a little over target, a success on which we'd been pluming ourselves for months, so the shrunken stock figures indicated continuous underpricing. Over to the sales-manager! What was the answer?

Scotty, equally tight-lipped, tried to explain. Our normal gross mark-up was 25 per cent on average in routine drapery, leaving out the special departments for the moment, and in order to push turnover to the quota set by the board he'd tacitly accepted 23 per cent as his buyers' yardstick, provided the extra sales produced the budgeted profit. But it had come out at 22.3 per cent. . . .

Under an inquisitorial crossfire, he and his senior buyers found some extenuating factors: under-purchasing in spring when the MD demanded over-draft reductions, mid-summer shortages over-corrected at excessive prices, over-slashing at the sales, under-stocked at Christmas. They'd miscalculated on their forecasts of continental buying, on the mark falling and the franc hardening, and lost their predicted margins completely.

While the MD was giving them both barrels on trade policies based on sterling movements to be cleared with him, the deputy-chairman asked aggressively what Accounts were doing? What had happened to their stock controls and profit estimates? Why were we carrying that costly punch-card hardware, if we couldn't give more efficient service?

I told him we couldn't trace profit shortfalls unless the buyers furnished lists of price reductions, which they notoriously disliked doing. We'd supplied sheaves of special analyses of sub-departmental trading, lists of bedroom suites, or fur coats, or men's overcoats, but we rarely got any feedback. Without interim stock checks. . . .

Prinny said judicially that there was insufficient liaison between salesmen and accountants, and the deputy-c. said it was ludicrous giving figures that weren't wanted. He's a rat, really, seeing that he's always pontificated that interpretation of what he called the book-keepers' numbers must be reserved to the marketing experts. I suggested that marked selling prices might be tested by our internal auditor vis-à-vis purchased prices, but the MD wouldn't accept this empire-building effort, and Prinny shot down the extra stock checks on the grounds that week-end work sparked-off labour issues.

Actually, we've suffered from over-delegation. It should be a director's responsibility to test these stock mark-ups.

source the number of bankruptcies and bad debtors recorded during the period April to June 1970 was over 1,000 for the second successive quarter, whereas on previous experience a seasonal decline would have been expected.

The total for the first six months of the year was 2,055, compared with 1,700 in the same period for 1969. In percentage terms, the number of cases in the first and second quarters of 1970 was respectively 12 and 31 per cent higher than the 1969 figures.

Solicitors' Accounts in 1969

LAST year the Law Society sent reminders to 1,070 solicitors who had failed to deliver their accountants' certificates by the due date; this is approximately 5 per cent of the total number of practising solicitors.

According to the 1969-70 report of the Society's Council, the missing certificates were subsequently received, or an adequate explanation was given for their non-delivery.

Inspection of solicitors' accounts under the provisions of the Solicitors' Accounts Rules and the Solicitors' Trust Accounts Rules were ordered in 62 cases. On two occasions, the Law Society's investigating accountant was instructed to visit other accountants for clarification of specific qualifications in their certificates. There were also two cases in which the Council found it necessary to apply to the Court, under the provisions of the Solicitors Acts 1957 and 1965, for orders to freeze solicitors' accounts.

During the year, the Council had occasion to disqualify one accountant from reporting upon solicitors' accounts.

Compensation for Loss of Office

I – Tax Relief for the Payer

by LAWRENCE OSBORNE, A.T.I.I.

THE payment of compensation to retiring directors has been the subject of several legal battles in recent years. From the point of view of taxation, a payment of this nature gives rise to two distinct problems: first, whether the sums paid will be allowed as a deduction in computing the total taxable profits of the paying company, and secondly, whether the recipient will be liable to income tax and surtax in respect of these payments.

The admissibility of sums paid to directors as compensation for loss of office, as a deduction from trading profits in computing the corporation tax liability of the paying company, is governed by section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act 1952.¹

This section states that

'in computing the amount of profits or gains to be charged under Case I or Case II of Schedule D, no sum shall be deducted in respect of: (a) any disbursements or expenses not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade'.

On the subject of what in the eyes of the law may constitute money laid out for the purposes of trade, Lord Justice Davey (Strong & Co of Romsey Limited v. Woodfield (5 TC 215)) expressed the following opinion:

'It is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course of, or arises out of, or is connected with the trade, or is made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made for the purpose of earning profits.'

It is evident, therefore, that in deciding whether or not a payment of compensation complies with the requirements of section 137 (a) one must consider in detail the reasons and objects of the payment as well as the circumstances in which it takes place.

On this basis, payments of compensation may be classified into three categories:

- (1) Payments upon retirement or dismissal of a director.
- (2) Payments made in contemplation of cessation of trade or liquidation.
- (3) Payments made in conjunction with take-over or disposal of a controlling interest in the company.

Compensation upon retirement or dismissal

Payments under this heading are normally made in order to fulfil the company's obligations as employer or, in case of dismissal, to free the company from an onerous contract which may be damaging to its trade or efficiency. In consequence, payments of this nature will – generally speaking – be accepted as made for the purposes of trade, and rank as expenditure deductible from profits chargeable to corporation tax.

In his judgment in the case of George J. Smith & Co Ltd v. Furlong (1968) (47 ATC 463), Mr Justice Cross expressed the following opinion:

'There is, of course, no doubt that compensation paid to a retiring director for loss of office may, in certain circumstances be an expense deductible for tax purposes. If, for instance, his colleagues on the board have formed the view that the continuance in office of a certain director is most prejudicial to the prosperity of the company, that in the interest of the company he must be induced to resign, and that the sum to be paid to him to secure his resignation is no more than has to be paid for the purpose, then clearly the expense would be deductible and it would not cease to be deductible because contemporaneously so as to get rid of him altogether, the retiring director sold his shares to his colleagues.'

The leading case on this subject is Mitchell v. B. W. Noble Limited (1927) (6 ATC 173). This case concerned a company the directors of which held office for life, so long as they should continue to hold the qualifying number of shares, subject to dismissal for misconduct. In the event of a director being dismissed, the remaining directors were empowered to require him to sell to them his shares in the company, at par.

During 1920 and 1921 considerable friction developed between a Mr Haylor and the two remaining members of the Board. It was considered necessary for the sake of the good name of the company that he should be dismissed, and in order to avoid litigation it was agreed to pay compensation amounting to £19,200 and to buy his 300 shares at par. It was contended for the company that £19,200 paid to Mr Haylor was money wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of business and that it was an admissible deduction from profits for tax purposes. The Court of Appeal held (reversing the decision of Mr Justice Rowlatt) that the payment was an expense of carrying on business and deductible from profits.

In this connection the dictum of Lord Justice Sargant may be of interest. Having agreed with the Master of the Rolls that the expenditure was incurred for the purposes of trade, his lordship continued as follows:

'Then comes the next point, whether this very large payment was so exceptional in its nature that it must be considered a capital payment and not a payment by way of deduction from annual outgoings. With regards to that I entirely agree with the view of the learned judge, that the dismissal of a servant or compensation paid to ensure the dismissal of a servant (which of course this director was - a servant of the company) is a payment which would in the ordinary course be attributed to the year in which the payment was made and I see no reason for thinking in this case that it was of the nature of capital expenditure.'

It may also be useful to refer to the judgment in the Court of Session (December 1956) in the cases of CIR v. Patrick Thompson Limited, CIR v. J. & R. Allen Limited and CIR v. Pettigrew and Stephens Limited (35 ATC 487). The above-mentioned cases were concerned with compensation paid to directors of subsidiary companies of the Scottish Drapery Corporation Limited who lost their offices upon take-over of the last-mentioned company by the House of Frazer Limited, which ultimately resulted in the liquidation of the said companies.

In his judgment, the Lord President (Lord Clyde) explains that: 'The system adopted by the Scottish Drapery Corporation Limited to operate its subsidiaries was to confer on the managing director of each subsidiary virtually complete control of his company. The policy of the House of Frazer Limited was centralization.'

The directors in question, Lord Clyde explains, were 'too old and not sufficiently energetic to carry out the new policy', and had to be dismissed. The Court held that the dismissal and the consequent payment of compensation were carried out entirely in the interest of the trade and the sums paid were admissible as a deduction from the profits of the trade for tax purposes.

The cases quoted above provide reasonable grounds for the assumption that payment of compensation, when untrammelled by consideration of cessation or share transactions will be allowed as a deduction from taxable profits.

Loss of office due to cessation of trade

Treatment of compensation paid under this heading may be dealt with by reference to the case of Godden v. A. Wilson's Stores (Holdings) Limited (1961) (40 ATC 213). This case concerns a company which up to 1958 carried on business as a rubber and coconut planter in Malaya. In March 1958 the estates were sold and the company's business was discontinued. The manager of the company's estates who served the company since 1946 became redundant and the directors decided to pay him compensation for loss of office. The Revenue contended that as the business of the company had ceased, the payment could not be treated as made for the purposes of trade. The Special Commissioners and later the High Court decided in favour of the Revenue and this decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal.

In the above-mentioned case Mr Justice Plowman distinguished between payments made for the purposes of trade and 'cases where payments were made not in order to enable the company the better to carry on its trade but to enable it to go out of business, and in those cases the Courts have held that the money so paid was not deductible as an expense wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of trade'. Reference may also be made to the case of CIR v. Anglo Brewing Co Ltd (4 ATC 304) where it was decided to make certain lump-sum payments to the employees in commutation of their rights to gratuities and pensions upon the company ceasing to trade. In this case Mr Justice Rowlatt said:

'They (the directors) came to the conclusion that they would make certain payments because they were not going to carry on business any longer. Now I cannot conceive how under those circumstances, there can be any evidence at all that the payments were made for the purpose of trade, because that must mean for the purposes of keeping the trade going and making it pay. There was not any such purpose at all. The purpose was to wind it up.'

The case was decided in favour of the Inland Revenue.

Compensation payments resulting from take-over

Payments of this nature arise usually when a controlling interest in a private company is acquired by another company and as a result of this the vendor directors have to resign their positions. It is usual in these circumstances for a part of the consideration given for the shares to take the form of compensation for loss of office. The amount of the payment would be based – generally speaking – on the value of shares transferred and the price. Any loss or deprivation which may be suffered by the vendor directors as a result of their resignation is rarely taken into account.

The above practice gave rise to a number of cases in recent years all of which were, unfortunately, decided in favour of the Revenue. The legal point of view is outlined by Mr Justice Donovan in the case of James Snook and Company Limited v. Blasdale (1952) (31 ATC 268) as follows:

‘The mere circumstance that compensation to retiring directors is paid on a change of shareholding control does not, in itself, involve a consequence that such compensation can never be a deductible trading expense. So much is common ground. But it is essential in such cases that the company should prove to the Commissioners’ satisfaction that it considered the payment question wholly untrammelled by the terms of the bargain its shareholders had struck with those who were to buy their shares and came to a decision to pay solely in the interest of the trade. This may be very difficult at times because the persons to take the decision are often those who are to get the compensation, but the difficulty in securing an independent decision by or on behalf of the company does not do away with the necessity of securing it if the title to deduct the compensation as trade expense is to be sought.’

It would appear that ‘proof to the satisfaction’ of commissioners and judges alike is not easy to provide, as demonstrated by the following cases.

In James Snook and Co v. Blasdale ((1952) 31 ATC 268) the shareholders agreed to sell their shares to another company and the directors, who were also the vendor shareholders, agreed to resign upon receipt of compensation for loss of office totalling some £30,000.

It was contended on behalf of the company that the compensation was paid wholly for the purpose of trade. The General Commissioners rejected this contention and their decision was confirmed by the High Court and subsequently by the Court of Appeal.

The cases of George Peters & Co Ltd v. Smith and Williams v. J. J. Young and Son Limited (42 ATC 389) originated from the take-over of the above-mentioned companies by Friary Meux Ltd. A total of £84,821 was actually paid as compensation for the loss of office to the directors of the two companies. It was contended on behalf of the companies that the amount paid in compensation should be deducted from profits for tax purposes.

Mr Justice Wilberforce pointed out that: ‘The proposal to compensate the directors was one which had arisen at the earliest possible stage of negotiations’ and ‘did form in a most intimate manner part of the bargain between Friary Meux Limited and Peters’. The fact that the offer to buy the shares became unconditional before the resolution to compensate the directors was passed did not alter the situation. He held that the amounts paid as compensation were not paid out for the purposes of trade and were not admissible as a deduction from profits for tax purposes.

The case of George J. Smith v. Furlong (supra) to which reference was made earlier in this paper is of particular interest because the sale of shares and the payment of compensation was in part at least due to disagreements between directors, which also played an important part in the case of Mitchell v. B. W. Noble Ltd.

Despite this apparent similarity, Mr Justice Cross ruled that the payments were not made wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the trade, pointing out that Mr True (one of the directors) negotiated ‘on his own account and not as a representative of the company’.

Payments generally

In conclusion, the position may be summarized as follows:

- (1) Payments to directors upon retirement or dismissal unrelated to cessation of business or a major change in the control of the company should be allowed as a deduction from company's profits, generally without undue opposition on the part of the Inland Revenue.
- (2) Payments made in conjunction with or in anticipation of cessation of business will not normally be allowed. In view of the decisions on the subject, there seems little advantage in engaging in negotiations in this connection.
- (3) Payments of compensation made in conjunction with take-overs or a major change in the control of the company have been disallowed in recent Court cases, despite the apparently favourable dicta of the judges. There is usually a certain amount of scope for advance planning. The vendor directors may, for example, be allowed to remain on the board for a year or two after take-over, before relinquishing their offices and receiving compensation. This procedure would make it possible to establish a similarity to the Scottish Drapery Corporation cases mentioned above.

Unfortunately, the practitioner is often advised of the take-over only after certain agreements have been signed and so it may be too late to arrange the matter in a suitable manner. In these circumstances there remains only a legal battle with the Revenue and it is hoped that the various quotations and statements given may facilitate a little the unenviable task of the professional adviser.

If only they knew about us...

there are about 5,000 companies we could help go public.

• Among your clients there is at least one company with the growth potential, the will and the management to go public within the next five years. It will have been running for more than three years and will be currently making profits of at least £25,000 before tax. But it needs capital to realise its full potential – and that is where Midland Montagu comes in.

The essence of our operation is capital – capital for expansion. So that your client can build up profits to the level appropriate for a public flotation.

The advantages of dealing with us.

Your client will have a financial partner with interests identical to his own. A partner who together with his associates can save him (and you) time and effort by helping transact all his financial business and in particular can arrange for the all-important sponsorship of his eventual flotation.

Our capital package will be tailored to his needs – he won't be burdened with loans for longer than necessary nor will he be persuaded to give up a bigger equity stake than he needs. And although we won't interfere in the management or with your client's existing relationships with his professional advisers, both you and he will find our directors and executives have a breadth of management experience beyond the confines of the City and finance.

How we work.

An initial approach by client or professional adviser leads to a meeting. Following this – if both parties agree to go ahead – we take a detailed look at the company. Assuming we like what we see – and more importantly your client and you like what you see of us – we will make an offer of finance. If this is acceptable the only formalities remaining are a satisfactory Accountant's Report and a formal agreement settled by Solicitors.

We usually take around a 20 per cent. share in the equity – directly in shares or by way of a loan convertible into shares sometime before flotation – whichever is more appropriate to your client's requirements. Alongside this equity participation we normally provide the balance of the capital by a three to five year medium term loan.

I'd like to know more about what Midland Montagu Industrial Finance can offer my client.

Smaller Audits – Bigger Problems? – II

by K. J. SHARP, T.D., M.A., F.C.A.

The audit report

HAVING completed his examination of the records, the relevant tests of the system and verification of assets and liabilities, the auditor has to consider his report to the shareholders. There has already been some discussion above on the effect which improving standards have had on the auditing of large companies, and the suggestion has been made that those reading the reports of small companies should not be left with the impression that as great reliance can be placed on the accounts of the small business as on those of the large, if in fact such is not the case. There is usually little doubt in the auditor's mind on the more factual aspects of the matters upon which he is obliged to report either explicitly or implicitly. He will, for example, have formed his opinion as to whether or not proper books of account have been kept, whether the accounts are in accordance with those books, and whether the accounts have been prepared in accordance with the provisions of the Act, though I regret to say that it is still not uncommon to come across accounts audited by members of this Institute which, on their face, are clearly not in accordance with the 1948 Act let alone that of 1967. The over-riding requirement, however, of the auditor's duties is that he should state whether the accounts show a true and fair view, and this is the matter which in preparing his report is likely to cause him the greatest difficulty. It is also the one upon which he must use his judgement to the greatest extent, most of the other matters being primarily factual.

6.2. There are two aspects to true and fair which he must consider. Firstly whether the information in the accounts is shown in a true and fair manner, and this is normally a greater problem for the large company with complicated transactions than for the small family business. Secondly he must consider whether it is reasonable for him to state that in his opinion the accounts show a true and fair view, having regard to the deficiencies in control and other matters which he may have discovered during the course of his audit. Where he has been able to satisfy himself by additional tests, he may be able to give an unqualified report in the standard accepted form, but in so far as he has not been able to satisfy himself, he should clearly report to the shareholders accordingly. The problem that then arises is how this report should be phrased, and it has to be admitted that the majority of auditors have up to now avoided the issue entirely and given standard 'clear' reports to all companies, whether or not control is deficient, provided that the accounts comply with the other requirements of the Companies Acts. Doubt is now being widely expressed and there is considerable debate up and down the country on the dangers of this attitude, but some members are still reluctant to prejudice their client's interest by qualifying a report when the only reason for disquiet is inherent in the nature of the company's organization.

6.3. I have already made reference to the booklet Internal Control in the Small Business, published by the Canadian Institute, which deals specifically with the question of the 'manager dominated company'. This term is used in Canada to describe a company in which, irrespective of the effectiveness of control systems in lower echelons, there is no effective control over the manager himself, and where objective evidence to support the manager's representations is not available. A preferable (though still ungainly) description for English ears might be 'one man dominated company'. No differentiation is made between the manager who is also the owner (either wholly or partly), and the one who is only an employee.

6.4. It has been suggested that individual domination of a company in the sense implied in the pamphlet is irrelevant as internal control systems are intended to be employed by management as an aid to carrying out its duties and not used as a control on management itself. The first paragraph of the Institute's statement on internal control (U4) uses the words 'The responsibility for establishing and maintaining an adequate system of internal control lies with a company's directors'. I see nothing in this sentence which relieves the directors of the responsibility for establishing and operating such a system among themselves, but from the point of view of the present discussion, we are not concerned with mere verbal interpretation. The question that matters is whether the auditor can form an opinion as to whether the accounts show a true and fair view. If one individual has effective domination of a company and the auditor is unable to satisfy himself by testing and external verification as to the reliability of the explanations and information supplied by that individual, can he properly give an unqualified report, if the matters about which he is not satisfied are material? It would not bring much credit to the profession if it became accepted that the auditor need only concern himself with the organization of a company at subsidiary levels, and could properly accept uncritically the representations of a single individual in a dominant position if no verification were practical.

6.5. I recommend a study of the Canadian pamphlet (which has only 19 pages excluding the appendices) to anyone who is interested in this problem. The argument and the conclusions reached by the authors for adoption in suitable circumstances are very persuasive, though I should stress that it does not amount to a recommendation by the Canadian Institute.

6.6. The pamphlet comes down firmly in favour of the adoption of the negative assurance, i.e., a modified report which records that full control systems are not operative, but gives an assurance that the auditor has encountered nothing which impairs the true and fair view. This type of approach has not been widely adopted in any country so far as I know and has not so far been viewed with favour by any United Kingdom or American Institute for general adoption. However, the International Study Group is at present involved in preparing a paper on smaller audits and it will be interesting to see whether any change in this attitude can be detected. There was certainly no indication of such a change in the Group's 'The Independent Auditor's Reporting Standards in three Nations', paragraph 74 of which reads:

'As noted in the foregoing paragraphs, negative assurances are presently considered appropriate only in limited and special circumstances in all three nations. The use of negative assurances even in such special situations appears to a large extent to contradict the more generally accepted view that such assurances should not be given because matters having a material effect on financial statements may not reasonably be expected to be detected in a limited review. Further, considerable difficulty has been experienced in developing appropriate wording for any kind of letter or report involving a negative assurance so as to avoid unwarranted conclusions being drawn by the reader.'

This paragraph seems to import an additional consideration in that the negative assurance arises from 'a limited review'. The whole essence of the argument for the negative assurance rests on the assumption that full audit procedures appropriate to the company have been carried out.

6.7. Another objection is that the widespread use of negative assurances would lead to lower standards of auditing, as auditors would tend to become sloppy if they could shelter behind such an innocuous affirmation. Possible answers to these various objections are mentioned in paragraphs 6.14 to 6.18.

6.8. In the meantime, and notwithstanding the present establishment view on this particular matter, it is worth while considering what are the options open to the auditor of the small company in the circumstances I have envisaged, namely where the auditor, although unable to satisfy himself because of inadequate control systems and lack of feasible alternative tests, has no other specific reason for qualifying his report.

Option I

6.9. The first option is an unqualified report given in traditional form using as justification the argument that anyone looking at the accounts and knowing the business would realize that the company was not of a size to have a full internal control system, or alternatively that the lack of qualification implied that the auditor felt that the system was reasonable having regard to the size and nature of the company. In addition to the growing unease among members of the Institute to the continuing use of this approach, the principal objections are:

- (a) that the accounts as such do not necessarily reveal anything about the size of the company in the sense in which it is meant in this paper, and many creditors and others know little about the detailed nature of the businesses with which they deal;

- (b) that the law does not differentiate between companies according to size; and
- (c) that the value of an unqualified report is reduced if some companies receive it whether or not their systems are adequate to enable the auditor to form an opinion.

Option II

6.10. The second option is to give a qualified report, indicating the deficiencies in control or other matters upon which the auditor was unable to satisfy himself and stating that therefore it was not possible to form an opinion as to whether the accounts show a true and fair view. While this approach has the undoubted advantage that it puts the auditor's attitude beyond doubt and safeguards his position, it does not on the other hand make clear whether the situation revealed is one which the company ought and could reasonably be expected to rectify (which would be the case in a large company), or whether it is a normal situation having regard to the circumstances. Such denial of an opinion could clearly be severely prejudicial to the interests of a company and lead to an unwelcome deterioration in the relationship between auditor and client. There is, however, little doubt that if this approach became generally adopted, it would lead to widespread qualification. I would guess that the proportion could easily exceed half the companies on the register. Its introduction would require much the same sort of tactful handling of clients as is the case in dealing with attendance at stock-taking, to which I referred earlier, though to an even higher degree.

Option III

6.11. The third option is a modified report which may or may not amount to a negative assurance. The normal report would be modified to indicate that there is nothing unusual in the circumstances of the company having regard to the size and scope of its business, but that nevertheless the auditor's ability to form an opinion is limited because of deficiencies in the system of internal control or other factors which are reasonable and unavoidable in the circumstances. The modification may go on to state that the auditor has no reason to suppose that the accounts do not conform to the requirements of the Companies Acts. The distinction between a qualification being a positive statement that something is wrong, and a modification being an adjustment of phraseology to suit particular circumstances should be noted.

6.12. I am indebted to a colleague for the following suggestions as a possible approach to the drafting of such a report, the words in brackets being optional in the light of the circumstances:

- (1) During the period under review (in common with many businesses of similar size and organization) internal control (on management) was limited and there were no practicable audit procedures to determine the effect of this limitation. Subject to this reservation, the accounts set out on pages . . . to . . . in our opinion give a true and fair view of the state of the company's affairs at and of its profit for the year ended on that date and comply with the Companies Acts 1948 and 1967.

- (2) During the period under review (in common with many businesses of similar size and organization) internal control (on management) was limited and there were no practicable audit procedures to determine the effect of this limitation. For this reason we are unable to report whether the accounts set out on pages .. to .. give a true and fair view of the state of the company's affairs at and of its profit for the year ended on that date but during the course of carrying out the full audit procedures which in our opinion were appropriate to the company we encountered nothing which indicates that they do not give such a view. Subject to the foregoing, the accounts in our opinion comply with the Companies Acts 1948 and 1967.

The second suggestion is an example of a negative assurance, and for this reason many practitioners would reject it. It does, however, also contain a positive statement that full audit procedures appropriate to the case were carried out and adoption of such words would ensure that auditing standards did not fall; there is no reason why similar words should not be incorporated in the first suggestion.

6.13. The advantages of the adoption of this option are:

- (a) it does not confuse the acknowledgement of the organizational problems, which are normal in many small businesses, with the necessity to indicate an established shortcoming in the accounts which would still give rise to a qualification whether or not the report were modified;
- (b) a realistic framework is provided within which the auditor of the smaller business can report with integrity without causing embarrassment to his client (assuming such modifications become standard form), at the same time coping satisfactorily with any recording deficiencies; and
- (c) attention would still be drawn to a 'true' qualification.

6.14. Several powerful contrary arguments have been deployed, and these must be considered. Firstly it is alleged that the general adoption of this approach would lead to two standards of auditing. It is important that this should be avoided, for whatever report ultimately appears on the accounts of a company, the prior work must be of a high standard using all those techniques which are appropriate in the circumstances, and where a qualification is necessary it will be given.

6.15. Secondly it is objected that many companies which would be entitled to a normal unqualified report would only receive a modified report as a result of the disinclination of the auditor to take risks. Of course at the margin this is inevitable as it is in any kind of arbitrary division, but at the moment there is little doubt that the reverse is true in that many companies are receiving unqualified reports to which they are not properly entitled. The tendency would in any event be counteracted to some extent because some clients would press for a normal report, and this pressure may well be reinforced by financial interests concerned in the company, e.g., long-term lenders and bankers.

6.16. Thirdly it is suggested that businesses would lose the encouragement to improve their systems which is at present provided by the threat of qualification. To some extent this is true, but where expense would be exorbitant, or the excessive involvement of a single individual is the problem, further improvements will not take place anyway. Auditors must be encouraged to make recommendations for improvement within the framework of the company and the fact that a company was customarily in receipt of a modified report would not mean that the auditor would not also send a letter of weaknesses, albeit restricted to areas of practical application.

6.17. The fourth objection is that directors have a statutory obligation to show a true and fair view. This may be dismissed as it is not what the argument is about; it is not suggested that the directors should evade their responsibilities. All that is being said is that the auditor may not be able to form an opinion as to whether the resultant accounts show such a view.

6.18. The fifth and final objection is that the auditor would be evading his duty as the Companies Act lays upon him the positive responsibility of stating whether or not in his opinion the accounts show a true and fair view. In the light of all the evidence available to him he must, it is argued, having used his judgement, make up his mind one way or the other and report accordingly. This is probably the strongest of the arguments against the proposal for modified reports, but it is suggested that practice has moved ahead of legislation in that while internal control was not a prime consideration when the 1948 legislation was being drafted, it is now assuming increasing importance, and overall standards of auditing have been raised. 'A true and fair view' is to some extent a subjective matter, and is not defined at any point in the legislation. As indicated above, however, and notwithstanding the extent of alternative tests, it is frequently impossible to form an opinion on the true and fair view in the absence of an adequate system of internal control. In other words, practice has moved ahead of legislation, and in the light of modern thought the Legislature should not be surprised if the issue is avoided as it is in effect setting an impossible task. If the company does not maintain a system enabling the auditor to carry out his duty (and there is no specific legal requirement for the company so to do), the only alternative would be for him to resign, and it is surely not suggested that this is the appropriate remedy in these circumstances. How would his replacement be found? The effect of this objection is to see only in terms of black and white. Experience suggests that most clients are grey.

6.19. In a negative way Parliament seems to have acknowledged the difficulty as recent legislation concerning building societies and friendly, industrial and provident societies has laid down that satisfactory systems of control must be established and maintained. It is curious that this requirement was omitted from the Companies Act 1967, but perhaps this reflects an acknowledgement by the Legislature of the true position in the smaller company.

6.20. The objections to modified reports in the case of the smaller business are not sufficiently weighty to counteract the arguments in their favour. Whilst it is doubtful whether objection could be taken in law to auditors' reports such as those drafted in paragraph 6.12, representations should be made to the Board of Trade to the effect that future legislation should specifically permit modified reports along the lines indicated. The proposal would obviously have to be restricted in normal usage to the smaller companies, and in this regard, there is an obvious link with the proposals for proprietary companies contained in 'Companies Legislation in the 1970s'.

6.21. It is highly desirable that all auditors, in addition to their formal report to shareholders, should make a practice of writing letters of weakness to directors to encourage them to improve their systems, but it is important that the proposals made should have relevance to the size and nature of the company. It would be foolish to advise a client to install a complicated and expensive system if the cost of operating it would make a substantial reduction in his profit. On the other hand, in practically every company there are numerous areas where a tightening up of procedures or a reallocation of duties among the existing staff would lead to substantially improved systems of control, and wherever possible the client should be encouraged to adopt these. Letters of weakness also prove valuable in the unhappy event of the auditor being challenged in the Courts.

The future

7.1. The Institute statement issued in December last year entitled 'Statement of Intent on Accounting Standards in the 1970s' was a clear indication of the determination of the Council in response to significant public criticism and disquiet to press forward with the development and improvement of accounting standards and auditing techniques, and obviously this approach ought to be welcomed by all the members of our profession. The criticisms in response to which the statement was issued, however, were exclusively concerned with events which had taken place in respect of quoted companies, and yet the statement, like companies legislation, makes no distinction between the large and the small. Before long the auditor of the smaller company will find himself with the additional task of deciding whether in his opinion his clients' accounts disclose their accounting bases and conform to the definitive accounting standards laid down by the Council. How onerous this task will be will depend on the statements which are issued henceforth by the Council, but there is certainly doubt in the minds of many of the value of such a requirement in the case of the small family business. The fact that the Statement of Intent has been issued in my opinion increases the necessity of acknowledging that a difference, in kind rather than degree, exists between some of the small businesses which are the daily diet of the smaller practitioner, and the substantial public companies which are from time to time the subject of sensational newspaper stories. It seems therefore not unreasonable to argue, as a matter of principle, that the blanket adoption of all the accounting and auditing techniques which are appropriate in the field of large-scale industry and public quoted companies may be totally inappropriate in the case of the hundreds of thousands of small businesses which make up such a fundamental part of British industry and commerce today. As I have already indicated, the leadership of the profession obviously rests with the big firms, and it is important that the profession as a whole should keep up with all new techniques as they are developed, but the adoption of each one should be selective and restricted to appropriate cases. Such an approach must, however, lead inevitably to the conclusion that the public should not be confused and misled by the uncritical adoption of similar wording in the audit reports of all companies.

7.2. If it is thought that no change can be made in the absence of legislation (a view which I do not share), then the Institute should press the point with the Board of Trade in a supplement to 'Companies Legislation in the 1970s'. The Province of Manitoba has amended its Companies Act so that private companies are not required to have an audit at all, though they may have one if they wish. Though this has a certain appeal in logic it is in my view carrying matters too far. Since inclusion of accounts with the annual return is now a statutory obligation for all companies it is desirable that third parties examining those accounts should have some independent indication of the reliance which may be placed upon them. This is part of the price paid for the privilege of limited liability. Some other Canadian provinces are however considering similar amendments, and the matter is clearly in the forefront of accountancy thought in that country. It is now time for the debate to become public here.

Conclusion

8.1. I have tried in these few pages to indicate the importance of improving the standards of auditing of smaller companies, to suggest that appropriate action does not necessarily lie in slavish imitation of the big battalions but in the development of a distinctive approach requiring an equally high standard of professional skill and judgement. I have also discussed the problems in a few areas of practical application. If the views expressed command the general support of my readers, it remains to persuade those who have not yet adopted such an approach to do so. I hope that at least I will have stimulated some useful discussion about a problem upon which the Council will have to pronounce in the near future.

8.2. Perhaps it would be useful to suggest some topics upon which initial discussion might be based, and I attach these at appendix 'C'. Previous experience on Oxford courses suggests that the list need not be too long - I have never yet been in a group that ran out of steam!

APPENDIX C

Suggested points for consideration:

- (1) Is it desirable to make a legislative distinction between the audit requirements of 'big' and 'small' companies?
- (2) Are the accounts of small companies, in general, as reliable as those of large companies?
- (3) Should the Council explicitly make failure to carry out Institute recommendations on auditing a cause for disciplinary proceedings?
- (4) Should Internal Control be regarded as covering senior management?
- (5) Is it practicable in a practitioner's office to divide audit and accountancy work?
- (6) In the circumstances envisaged in paragraph 4.8. have proper books of account been maintained?
- (7) Is the introduction of some modified form of standard audit report for small companies desirable if there is no legislative change?
- (8) Is a negative assurance an acceptable form of audit report?

LETTER FROM AMERICA

Curbing the Urge

New Rules on Mergers

from Our New York Correspondent

WITH many of America's most famous conglomerates embarrassed, and a few even bankrupt, the urge to merge is already being restrained, without help from the accountancy profession. Yet it required real courage – and four months of extremely difficult discussions – for the Accounting Principles Board of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants to agree upon a tighter set of rules governing future corporate mergers. The revised Opinion, published last month, is likely to be formally adopted before the end of July and to apply to all mergers concluded after August 31st, 1970 – a date that investors as well as accountants will have reason to remember for many years to come.

Pooling of interests to continue

According to some observers, a major cause of the present disarray in the stock-market and in corporate finances has been the ease with which merger-hungry conglomerates could, in effect, print currency with which to buy solid, old-established companies, and thereby jack up their combined earnings and give another upward spin to the price of their stock.

The new rules will, however, allow merging companies to continue using the 'pooling of interests' technique, under which assets acquired are taken on to the books at historical rather than market value – as though the companies had always been a combined operation. But it will no longer be possible to pay for these assets in convertible debentures, rights and other forms of 'funny money'. From now on, a straight exchange of ordinary shares will be required.

A further restriction on pooling will eliminate the possibility of dressing up a bad year's performance by adding-in the effects of a merger consummated between the time when the accounting year ends and when the annual report appears. An example of this practice has been seen in the 1969 report of a well-known vending company, which carries a footnote indicating that nearly all its profit – equivalent to over £1½ million – comes from acquisitions made after the end of the accounting year. Also barred will be any arrangement for the sale of assets acquired under a pooling, if the sale is to take place within two years – thus inviting the acquiring company to show a quick capital gain on the pair of transactions.

Confusion on standards

Most basic of all the changes is the proposal to ban pooling if the smaller company will represent less than 10 per cent of the voting shares of the combined operation. This restriction arises from the belief of some accountants that the pooling concept should have been confined to its original sphere – namely, to portray the state of affairs when two companies of similar size and activities join forces, and not to allow the conglomerates of the sixties to gobble up small businesses in all manner of different industries.

Even firms that take a less restrictive view have been disturbed by the lengths to which pooling has been taken. Arthur Andersen & Co, which has usually favoured the pooling technique, admitted as long ago as 1962 that it found 'so much general confusion on this subject that it is difficult to determine what the present standards are'.

Yet opposition to the exposure draft circulated in March was in some cases extreme. After receiving hundreds of letters on the proposals, the American Institute described this as 'the most . . . controversial subject in the history of financial reporting'. Accountants in industry as well as those in practice have joined the fray. International Telephone & Telegraph, which has bought up an impressive assortment of rental and retail companies by the pooling method, has talked of suing the Accounting Principles Board to block the proposals.

'Size test' relaxed

Throughout the furore, the APB has stuck to its guns. It has allowed a two-month delay in the effective date for the new rules; and it has relaxed the 'size test' from the 25 per cent originally proposed to the 10 per cent announced toward the end of last month. But it has not abandoned its position that purchase, not pooling, must be used in some situations, and that goodwill purchased must be amortized in not more than 40 years. It evidently takes very seriously its effort to reduce the scope for unjustified accounting manoeuvres hoping thereby to appease most unwelcome demands for a government-imposed merger code.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

Decision Theory Analysis

A Useful or Useless Technique?

'WITHIN ten years, decision theory, conversational computers, and library programs should occupy the same role for the manager as calculus, slide rules, and mathematical tables do for the engineer today. The engineer of Roman times had none of these, but he could make perfectly good bridges. However, he could not compete today, even in bridge-building, let alone astro-engineering. Management is today at the stage of Roman engineering. Needless to say, managers will still use specialists, just as engineers use heat transfer experts.'

This is the prediction of Robert Newman, of General Electric. But prediction aside, what is the actual position today? Is decision theory analysis (DTA) really useful at the present time? Mr Brown, an associate professor of business administration at the University of Michigan, reports in the Harvard Business Review (May/June) on a survey of some 20 American companies made in 1969.

At first glance the findings appear to be startlingly in favour of DTA, but it must be noted that the mix of companies in the survey were selected on the basis of their known use of, or interest in, DTA. Consequently, no wide ranging conclusions as to the general usage of DTA by American corporations can be drawn from this survey. Nevertheless, even on a restricted selection basis the results are striking enough. Before proceeding to evaluate them, however, let us briefly recapitulate on the theory of decision theory analysis.

Suppose, by way of example, that a metal broker has a chance to buy uranium ore at an advantageous price. Provided he can get an import licence he is certain of a profit of £100,000. However, if he is refused the licence the consequential loss will be of the order of £40,000. He assesses his chances of getting the licence at around 50-50. Instead of tying his money up in this chancy venture he could buy tin from Malaya in which case he is certain of a profit of around £20,000. What should he do?

In decision tree form the choice would be as illustrated at foot of previous column.

To arrive at the expected value at A we multiply both the possible sums by their respective values and add. This gives a total expected value at A of $\frac{1}{2} \times (100,000) + \frac{1}{2} \times (-40,000) = £30,000$. Clearly the expected value of the tin venture is £20,000. The obvious decision choice is, therefore, to go for the uranium since £30,000 is greater than £20,000.

Of course, this is a very simple problem and decision theory analysis hardly seems required. Most business problems are comparatively sophisticated and decision analysis, if it is a suitable technique for application, needs to take account of various factors such as chance, time and the value of money (utility). However, the layout is still the same and this basic simplicity of presentation has been found to be the most important advantage of DTA in practice.

Du Pont experience

Let us, then, return to Professor Brown's findings and start with the experience of the Du Pont organization which pioneered the application of DTA – much as it pioneered network analysis some ten years earlier in time. Du Pont started using DTA as a serious management technique around 1960. According to the manager of the Du Pont management services division, DTA still has not reached the point where it has a major impact on high-level decisions. This failure, he argues, has been due mainly to the absence of educational effort aimed at the senior decision makers. At a slightly lower level he finds that DTA is being commonly applied in association with conventional analysis. Frequently it is used as a scientific tool to support the main argument.

At General Electric – another company that has been active in employing DTA for several years – decision theory has been found to be a useful tool in the area of plant applications. More than 500 instances of the application of computerized DTA have been recorded there in the past four years.

Not all companies that have tried DTA, however, have been so marginally impressed as Du Pont and General Electric. The Ford Motor Company has passed some 200 senior executives through a brief DTA course in the last few years yet, except for some middle management applications, little use has been made of decision theory by the organization as a whole. In support of DTA it is argued that this is probably due in part to the natural reluctance of senior managers to adjust to unconventional techniques.

From the whole spectrum of the 20 companies which feature in the survey, one or two clear findings emerged. The first, and perhaps the most important, was that the success or otherwise of DTA in an organization depended on the way it was applied. Most successful was the direct approach in which the decision theory analyst worked with the senior executive, was responsible to him and reported the results to him. The least successful was the 'arm's length' approach in which the analyst was employed and controlled from a central services department. In such cases the executive seemed to regard the analyst as a rival whose aim was to disrupt the decisions that he, the executive, had arrived at by less sophisticated techniques, but which he intuitively felt to be right.

The extreme example of the 'arm's length' analyst is the outside consultant and the survey does suggest that most consulting firms did relatively little DTA work for their clients. In parenthesis, it may be remarked that the reverse situation seems to apply in the United Kingdom, where very little use has yet been made of DTA – even by the big corporations – but some consultants do use the technique to support their conclusions.

This dichotomy between the intimate and the arm's length approach highlights one other important feature of DTA, which has emerged from the survey. It seems that senior executives were not only reluctant to put down figures when the information available was relatively uncertain, but much more importantly, they disliked disclosing some of the true reasons that entered into their private decision making. Sometimes these reasons were understandable in that they included secret or confidential information. Sometimes, however, they were much more personal.

The survey included one instance of an elaborate analysis of possible locations for a European subsidiary. The manifest reasons were in reality dominated by the subjective factor that the personnel wanted to be near the International School in Geneva.

At first sight the existence of such irrational factors might seem to be an argument against decision theory. The reverse, however, is really the case. Decision tree analysis, because of its logical form and layout, draws attention to and brings out into the open these apparently illogical but emotionally significant factors which play a part in decision-making.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE

Financing Research and Development

: A Perennial Problem for Rolls-Royce

THE accounts of Rolls-Royce Ltd, the world-famous company whose financial difficulties have lately been the subject of official intervention and of criticism from a shareholders' 'ginger group', form the subject of this week's reprint.

Basically, the problem concerns the cost of research and development plus the cost of carrying long-term contracts put against the inadequacy of profits. The company at present is financing a major part of the development costs of three new civil aero engines and this is placing a heavy burden on cash resources. To tide the company over, the Industrial Reorganization Corporation is lending Rolls-Royce £10 million immediately, with provision for a further £10 million to be available from April 1971 subject to terms and conditions to be negotiated at that time.

The first £10 million is a seven-year loan, at interest rates averaging approximately $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum, convertible at 24s during the fourth and fifth years and at 30s in the sixth and seventh years into Rolls-Royce ordinary shares. The maximum number of shares which may be issued on conversion is 8,333,333.

The Industrial Reorganization Corporation has stated that it would not be its intention to retain any shares acquired on conversion but while it continues to hold a substantial interest IRC will have representation on the Rolls-Royce board.

Complexities

The complexities of aero engine production are clear enough, even from the statement of the commercial and Government connections involved. Rolls-Royce is currently financing the launching of the RB 211-22 for the Lockheed TriStar with a fixed Government participation of £47.1 million; the M45H for the German VFW 614 twin-engined feeder line aircraft with some participation by the German Government in the development cost, the Viper 600 for the Hawker Siddeley 125, and other applications without British Government participation but in partnership with Fiat.

Sir Denning Pearson, Rolls-Royce's chairman, comments that with the continuing increase in size and complexity of major civil aero engines since the original Dart, the cost of these developments has become increasingly great in relation to the size of the company's commercial aero engine business. The result is that 'it has become quite impossible to pay for these developments out of the profits arising from the current commercial business'.

More recently, these difficulties in relation to the company's US competitors have been exaggerated by Rolls-Royce's lack of assistance for the development of large commercial engines which the US industry receives indirectly from its Government's military programmes and directly by military orders for similar engines. Rolls-Royce have, in fact, to pay levies to the British Government for commercial sales of military engines and their civil derivatives.

Partnership

Sir Denning makes the point that partnership between the company and the British Government has proved successful in the past. The Government invested £33.6 million in the launching programmes for the Dart, Avon, Tyne, Conway and Spey engines, and the company invested over £90 million. Total business from these engines is estimated to be £1,260 million - 75 per cent for export. The Government has more than recovered its investment in the Dart and is expected to recover its total investment in the other four engine types in due course.

The company, Sir Denning states, only commits itself to a new project in anticipation that it will recover the costs involved and provide profits in the future but it is in this part of the business that the real hazard lies. It is in this sphere that it has been considered prudent to provide £20 million against the rise of non-recovery of total development costs of the RB 211-22, even though present estimates of sales and costs would achieve full recovery of total estimated development expenditure.

In the directors' report the comment on this point is that considerations involve estimates of sales and costs relating to many years in the future while, in addition, development of this advanced engine and the application of carbon fibre materials is proving to be more expensive than anticipated. Cost estimates (via general cost escalation) up to full-scale production of the engine are substantially higher than would reasonably have been expected.

The obvious gravity of the situation is summed up in one sentence in the directors' report: 'Your directors are conscious that the final outcome of the RB 211-22 project may significantly affect the financial position of the company'.

Future

Sir Denning, looking at the immediate future, says that during the current year turnover is expected to remain at about the 1969 level with nearly 40 per cent on Government contracts in the aero engine divisions, divided almost equally between development work and production of new engines, with spares and repairs similarly divided between fixed price and cost-plus contracts, all of which are expected to be profitable. Other divisions are expected to achieve a modest increase over the 20 per cent of profitable turnover they contributed in 1969. The remainder of the turnover comes from sales of commercial engines, repairs and spares.

The company's share of development and preparation for production of the RB 211 will this year be an estimated £28 million. Of this, £22 million, before tax equalization adjustment, will be carried forward in the research and development asset leaving £6 million and the interest on the asset to be found out of the year's profits. Even so, an improvement in profits for 1970 could be achieved, although in current economic conditions it is impossible to forecast the result with confidence.

By 1972, growth of turnover by as much as one-third is expected to come largely from deliveries of civil engines but until the first full year of production of the RB 211 in 1972, profits will have to continue to bear the high cost of the engine's early production.

Cyclamates

PROHIBITION of the use of cyclamates last November created a certain amount of trouble for Ashe Chemical Ltd, a company doing substantial business in toilet preparations, pharmaceuticals and pet products. The brand names indicate the business: Amplex, Bandbox, Harlene, Eugene, Kruschen and Sherley's pet products. Turnover in 1969 totalled £2,165,950 against the previous year's £2,090,539, but for the first time for many years profits moved the wrong way and were back from £500,250 to £481,922 on trading, and from £478,080 to £462,473 pre-tax.

The company, however, seems shy of stating just how much the ban on cyclamates cost. Mr Cyril Young, chairman and managing director, says that the ban necessitated the withdrawal from sale of 'one of the group's products' (without saying which one) and this resulted in 'direct stock losses and consequential losses on other associated products'.

What this meant in money terms Mr Young does not say, which is a pity since a figure would have substantiated his statement with the annual report that 'had it not been for these unfortunate circumstances, over which the group had no control, the profits for 1969 would have been comfortably in excess of those for 1968'.

The situation, shareholders are told, was retrieved early in 1970, 'due, in the main, to the application of considerable energy and ability on the part of the group's technical and production staff'.

Hoveringham

MORE than most aggregates companies, Hoveringham Gravels Ltd is currently stronger in the value of its land reserves than it is on its profits. Turnover in 1969 was £9,439,459 against £9,263,150 but trading surplus was down from £2,243,435 to £1,822,450 and final net earnings only £187,889 against £308,446.

The past year's profits did not have to carry a repetition of the previous year's special depreciation of £362,067 on vehicles, and lower borrowings meant that interest charges rose only marginally; normal depreciation was little changed but land depletion charges were down. The tax charge, however, was up from £98,250 to £141,850.

Apart from the higher rate of tax, this increase was due to cessation of investment allowances and to the fact that certain reliefs were not as large as envisaged. This particularly applied to relief on land depletion which is described as 'very complex in calculation'.

Shareholders are told by the chairman, Mr Harold Needler, that 'the question of giving effect to this relief in our accounts is receiving consideration and may be subject to alteration next year. It is anticipated in the future that the charge for taxation will remain at a high level, as most of the reliefs contributing to low figures in the past have now been absorbed'.

On the subject of the valuation of aggregate bearing land, the directors' report states that in the board's opinion the value is 'substantially in excess of the book value' but that changing circumstances and inflation make an annual assessment impracticable.

It is thought that the figures would be of little guidance as the land will be depleted and is subject to a variety of conditions which could vary very materially over the years.

Peter Dixon

ONE of most touchy of profit forecasts is a forecast based on the estimated out-turn from a major piece of new plant. Last December shareholders in Peter Dixon & Son (Holdings) Ltd were warned that the board's forecast for 1969 was unlikely to be achieved and that the extent of the shortfall would depend on the rate at which the new paper machine achieved a satisfactory rate of production.

The rest can be guessed. The machine 'failed to achieve anything like budgeted output in time to contribute to the group profit' and UK operations of the paper division made an overall loss. The chairman, in his statement with the accounts, refers to 'enormous difficulties' experienced with the new machine, to the running-in time proving much longer than foreseen and to the point that even now it is not running profitably with a number of engineering faults still to be rectified by the manufacturers.

Another plant problem concerns the efficient operation of the waste paper de-inking plant 'due to the unexpected amount of plastic and latex in the collected waste paper'. Additional screening equipment has been ordered but if this is not fully successful the problem will need further research.

All that litter is not paper apparently, not plain straightforward paper anyway.

With this traumatic forecasting experience behind them the directors now say that their 1970-71 forecast will not be achieved. Profits in 1968-69 were £874,000 pre-tax and in 1967-68 £792,000. Originally it was anticipated that 1969-70 profits would be on 1967-68 lines and that 1970-71 would see a recovery to beyond the 1968-69 level. Profits for 1969-70 were in fact £637,000.

7 SPECIAL PROVISION FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ON RB 211-22

It has been the company's practice since the inception of the RB 211-22 programme in 1967 to carry forward the net development expenditure, after deducting Government participation and investment grants on prototypes, for amortisation against future sales. In 1969, following this policy, net expenditure of £5,342,000 was added to the research and development asset.

As stated in paragraph 3 of the Directors' Report, there must inevitably be uncertainties as to the ultimate recovery of research and development costs of this engine. Accordingly the directors consider it prudent to make a special provision of £20,000,000 against the risk of non-recovery of total development costs.

Taxation relief on the special provision has been anticipated because there is sufficient in the tax equalisation account at 31st December 1969 to ensure relief is obtainable.

The agreed Government participation to the launching costs of the RB 211-22 is £47,100,000 of which £239,400,000 relates to development costs. Of the total £31,731,000 had been received by 31st December 1969.

This is all the staff you need to process orders, produce invoices, check stocks, produce despatch notes and operate a computer.

INTERACT 75 makes it possible.

The Baric INTERACT 75 service gives you direct access to a major computer system from your own office.

But the real advantage of INTERACT 75 is the fact that the computer you plug into is already programmed to carry out the day-to-day commercial processes involved in running your business.

Like recording invoices: •
Issuing orders: Up dating stock records: Checking customer credit limits: And calculating discounts.

Baric is now offering this Commercial Management Service to a limited number of customers.

Probably companies with about 200–2,000 personnel; selling from stock; and coping with an invoicing problem.

Briefly, this is how it works.

All your orders, from whatever source, are passed to the girl operator at your INTERACT 75 terminal. She transfers the order data to the computer, via the terminal.

The computer immediately checks all the data against permanent file information.

If something is amiss, such as an item being out of stock, it advises her immediately.

If not, her single entry starts a number of balls rolling.

The computer records all the information on the user's private file: quantity, ledger entry, customer's name and address and so on, allowing for later detailed analysis for management reports. The computer then scans the file to prepare the invoice, noting any discount arrangements and adjusting the account.

Within seconds it passes the information back to the user's office and prints out the completed invoice, automatically.

The implications are obvious to every businessman.

Unfortunately we can only serve a few. So we would urge you to be quick about writing for details to Baric Computing Services Ltd., 68 Newman Street, London W1P 4EH.

CITY NOTES

NO ONE can pretend that the stock-markets are having an easy time. The current major factor for the City, as indeed for the whole country, is the situation at the docks, which can deal savage blows to an economy which is by no means as stable as the former Government suggested prior to the Election.

Added to this is the evidence of the recent trade figures for June. The £51 million deficit was worse than feared and, while the City has long realized that one month should not be taken in isolation, it does seem that the trade balance honeymoon is over.

The inference of these factors alone is that the new Government may have to wait a while before it can combat the economic situation by instilling 'growth'. But on the other hand if this is long delayed, industry will find further adverse reflections on its profits.

FOR the market itself, the Courtaulds 'bombshell' dropped by its chairman, Lord Kearton, at the annual meeting shows clearly the position in which some of the big industrial groups find themselves. Shareholders were told that Courtaulds' profits for the first quarter of the year were showing a 25 per cent decline and that the likelihood was that results for the whole year would show a similar trend.

Recently, too, a whole batch of company results have come to hand from such leaders as Great Universal Stores, Associated British Foods, Distillers, Woolworths, Scottish and Newcastle Breweries, and many others which give clear evidence of the effect of rising costs from wages, salaries, and raw materials – themselves a reflection of higher pay packets to workers.

By and large, companies have been able to increase turnover to offset the cost effect to some extent, but this cannot continue indefinitely. Particularly is this so in the all-important export markets where the passing on of cost increases has a definite competitive limit.

ALL these factors are affecting stock-markets at the present time. It means that investors as a whole are likely to be back on their 'sideline' waiting positions.

Indeed, the small turnover in the market at some 7,500 bargains a day demonstrates this point strongly.

At the same time it has to be allowed that current prices do discount adverse factors to quite an extent and, when any impact on the situation is made, and buyers feel confident to return, price movements are likely to be swift.

As usual on such occasions, advice is cheap and much continues to come from brokers on many fronts. The 'middle-road' counsel would seem to be to keep equity investment powder dry for a while, but be ready to return to the fray when the situation looks more encouraging. Then the target should still be the equity leaders, for there is little point in having second best.

ONE area of investment which has enjoyed increasing popularity recently is that for property bonds. The growth of investment offers on this front has been such as to lead the many life companies providing such schemes to the public to hold discussions with a view to forming an association whose objects would include the establishment of a code of conduct.

During the past seven months a committee has talked things over with a number of interested parties, including the Board of Trade. However, the very rate at which new life companies are entering the field makes the committee consider that an association would be premature at the moment.

Nevertheless, they felt it in the public interest to publish their own code of conduct and this is now issued. It deals with key issues of public concern such as independent valuation of properties, contents of advertising, sales literature, and many other points. While therefore of interest as a yardstick, the code is not binding on companies in the field. At the same time it does afford a standard against which investments can be assessed and that, in itself, could make the operation worth while. The fact that a code was sought, however, demonstrates the enormous growth in this form of investment over the recent past.

Management of Change – The Role of Information

by JOHN R. M. SIMMONS.

Gee & Co, paperback, 35s.

One of the more serious faults of management frequently met is its failure to give adequate attention to future developments and trends. It is not unusual that the management of a company operating at its peak is unaware of the danger of an immediate decline into a less active or less profitable situation due to changes in the conditions in which it operates.

As the author states in the introduction to this book, the organization and skills to examine the trends of development into the future are quite different from those needed to deal with the day-to-day requirements of the business. This dissimilarity also makes it essential that the study of new projects or developments should be in the hands of a team or department quite distinct from the ongoing business organization. Furthermore, the techniques of management of change have been inadequately recognized and taught in the past.

This study, undertaken at the instigation of the Council of the Institute of Office Management, was originally directed towards office managers to enhance the future value of their activities, but as the work developed it became directed towards the needs of the manager who is responsible for project development. The book is, therefore, a valuable contribution to management literature and should be of interest to businessmen who must act both as manager and entrepreneur.

A general approach to development being impractical, the author concentrates on the control of specific projects and the organization that such projects require. The book has, therefore, been built round a check-list of questions which will prove a practical tool to those embarking upon a development project.

Each question in the list is taken and examined in turn so that the manager of a project, or those responsible for supplying information to him, may be guided step by step in the work they are undertaking. These listed questions cover the original planning of a development project up to the point of making recommendations, the making of decision by top management to go ahead with the project proposals, the implementation of these proposals, and progress reports. The responsibility of the project manager and the requirements of a project organization are also dealt with.

The value of the book as a help to management may be again stressed and it is recommended that anyone responsible for introducing or conducting a development project could well keep a copy of this book by his side for constant reference and guidance.

Introduction to the Theory and Context of Accounting

Second Edition, by ROY SIDEBOTHAM.

Pergamon, 40s, flexi-cover 30s.

Now in its second edition, this introductory text to the theory of accounting has undergone considerable revision since it was first published in 1965. The author is Professor of Accountancy at the Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand, and in this revised text he has incorporated two chapters that have been contributed by Professor R. J. Chambers of the University of Sydney.

We have become accustomed to a high standard in the accounting literature from Australia and New Zealand and this volume shows every sign of enhancing that reputation. The introductory chapters give a concise but comprehensive outline of the origins of modern accounting and the development of the professional societies in Australasia, the United Kingdom and North America. Later chapters deal with the conventions and theory of accounting and the treatment of inventories, asset valuation, measurement of income, and the changing value of money. There is also a useful chapter on politics, the law and accounting.

With the growing trend towards full-time introductory courses for accounting students and their alleged concentration on the theoretical aspects of accountancy to the detriment of the practical aspects of the art, it is salutary to note that Professor Sidebotham relegates his explanation of double-entry principles to a nine-page appendix. However, it is only fair to point out that his aim is to explain the theory rather than the practice of accountancy and in this respect he makes a valuable contribution to the literature of the profession.

Managing the Introduction of Computer Systems

by ROGER TOMLIN.

McGraw-Hill, 60s.

The introduction of a computer, together with the attendant new philosophies and systems which will affect the entire organization, presents serious problems for management and a real test of their ability to cope with radical change. Even in the early period of computer use, when there was a slow conversion of individual data processing routines to computer operation, the problem was significant. Today, where sophisticated applications tend to be oriented to a complete management information system and challenge the whole managerial approach to decision-taking, the changes in attitudes and methods needed are far-reaching.

The author quite rightly points out at the beginning of this book that the changes will not merely be a 're-organization of existing clerical procedures, but involve the structure of an organization's management, and the functions which responsible people perform', and that 'unless this change is properly managed, the computer and the systems devised will never fully justify their existence'.

Much of the early part of the book is devoted to an analysis of the character of such changes and the changes required in managerial attitudes and policies to minimize the upheavals that will ensue. The remainder of the book is then concerned with the planning problems involved in preparing for the computer and bringing it on stream, including a network analysis of the tasks to be performed. Also examined in depth is the control and operating structure of the data processing function that should be adopted.

The text is remarkably free of the jargon which surrounds computers, and deals with the problems in a very practical way. It should form an essential part of the reading for executives at all levels whose organization is moving towards computer use, irrespective of whether or not they are directly involved, as well as for accountants and students who are concerned with the problems the use of computers create.

Green's Death Duties

Third (cumulative) supplement to sixth edition by D. J. LAWDAY, LL.B.

Butterworths, 30s.

This supplement is nearly three times as long as the last one. It contains within itself a comprehensive exposition of the new charge to estate duty on the deaths of individuals who have been beneficiaries of a settlement.

This exposition covers about twenty pages and it would be worth buying the supplement for that alone. Needless to say, owners of the textbook must regard the purchase of the supplement as an absolute must, particularly in the case of deaths after April 15th, 1970.

Mr Lawday is an official of the Estate Duty Office and, therefore, in a specially favourable position to write on actual practice, as well as theory.

Correspondence

The Future of the Accountancy Profession

SIR, - Up till now I have refrained from joining in the multitudinous pros and cons heaped on us either orally or in print, as I felt that having retired some years ago and with the possibly senile age of 80 not far ahead, my views might be considered to be unimportant; something of the past.

However, having followed the happenings of the last few months and especially the transcript of the Albert Hall meeting on June 24th, I would like to make a few comments before the final decision is made.

I would say at once that I regret the proposals which are now before us and I hope that there will not be a genuine two-thirds majority in favour of the scheme. The voting by a show of hands at the Albert Hall did not show a real majority of two-thirds of the total of those voters present!

We have been enjoined not to dwell on the past but to concentrate our minds firmly on the future, but I should like to refer to two documents of the past which I suggest all members who intend to vote should read, mark, and inwardly digest. One is the original Charter (in conjunction with the supplemental one in December 1948), and the other is the valuable History of the Institute, compiled by Sir Harold Howitt in 1965.

The Charters are examples of simplicity and clarity and firmly set out the fundamental essentials of becoming a chartered accountant. I need not repeat them except to emphasize that the serving of articles in the office of a member of the Institute in practice is obligatory.

As regards Sir Harold's History, I refer to section 1 on page 149 et seq., 'The Structure of the Profession', which describes so admirably the events from the date of the Charter, and the efforts made by the Council to arrive at some official connection with other bodies of accountants. I was one of the representatives of the Institute at the first meeting set up by Sir Charles Palmour in November 1943, and we had the valuable help of Lord Plender. That original committee consisted of five members of our Council (only two of us are now alive), four each from the Scottish and Incorporated Councils, three from the Association of Certified Accountants and one from the Irish Institute. I mention this formation because it later became extended into an official committee of these various bodies and remained in existence until integration with the Incorporated Society in November 1957.

The point I want to make here is that the aim during this long period was to form an official body to co-ordinate (not integrate) the interested bodies, as a joint representative committee which could speak officially as a whole for the profession on matters of joint concern. The full story of the two attempts at introducing Parliamentary Bills is told in the History. (The integration with the Incorporated Society was a different matter, being the union of 'like with like' based on the essence of articles – the rights of 'sitting tenants' being recognized).

I am very much in agreement with those who have so carefully explained their objections to the scheme, especially Messrs Nicholson, Sutherland and Coulson. I am especially in agreement with the latter's reference to the Association in his letter in The Accountant of July 9th. I had always expected that after the Society integration a similar scheme with the Association would follow within a reasonable time.

The word 'confusion' has been mentioned several times in the discussions. I must confess that in some respects I am confused and I cannot help feeling that if the scheme is adopted as it stands confusion will be more confounded, especially in the minds of the public generally and those who will have direct interest in the work of a chartered accountant.

May I quote Sir W. S. Gilbert:

'In short, whoever you may be,
To this conclusion we agree –
When everyone is somebodee,
Then no one's anybody!'

• Yours faithfully,

Norwich. A. S. H. DICKER, M.B.E., F.C.A.

Numeracy, Literacy, and Gobbledygook

SIR, – I write in general support of the two letters published on page 56 of your issue dated July 9th.

I reject the notion that university graduates are necessarily literate in the full sense. Probably they are becoming less and less literate as the arts are abandoned in favour of more philistine disciplines.

In the old days graduates who entered, for example, the accounting profession (admittedly in much smaller numbers than now) were mostly history or classics men and, whatever their inadequacies, semi-literacy and gobbledygook (Are these not just different names for the same thing?) were not included. Now would-be accountants follow a much narrower and more philistine course at university. The consideration that it is less narrow and less philistine than the training of an articled clerk is a mitigating circumstance rather than a defence of the new system. The danger is that some of our new graduates may be literate enough to write gobbledygook but not literate enough to write good, plain English.

Gobbledygook in its milder forms shows up as unnecessary verbiage and in the use of long and inappropriate words. (Why do nine chairmen out of ten 'anticipate' that next year's profits will be so much, when then mean 'expect'?) How many 'learned' papers are truly readable? How many of them are even intelligible, except to those who know it all already?

Our real need, I submit, is to distinguish between those occasions that call for numeracy and those that call for literacy. It is absurd to dress an essentially numerate discipline like accounting in a spurious literary garb, yet this is what we in universities are inclined to do. It is perhaps our defence mechanism against our lack of practical experience and practical achievement. We are trying, I think, subconsciously, to demonstrate that only we are equipped to evaluate the fundamental concepts of our discipline. We might do better to recognize our philosophic musings as an intellectual indulgence rather than as a contribution to accounting knowledge.

I have used strong words. I have perhaps even overstated the case against academics. In a sense that is my privilege, since I am myself an academic.

Having said that, may I point out that the literary shortcomings which we are discussing are by no means confined to accountants. Here is a literary gem from a unit-trust-linked endowment policy which I took out in 1960:

'If at any time during the currency of this policy capital gains are brought under a general charge to tax, and under any assessment or assessments made or liable to be made on the company an amount or amounts of such tax shall become payable by the company in respect of any capital gains received by the company in respect of its holdings of units of the trust, to the extent to which such tax shall relate to the number of units referred to in the schedule hereto such portion of the benefit to therein shall be surrendered as would be equal to the amount or amounts of tax on a capital gain equal to the difference between the value of the benefit at the date of policy and the value at the date the benefit becomes transferable or, alternatively, the said amount or amounts of tax shall be paid to the company'.

Translated into English that means: "The insurer will not pay any capital gains tax that may arise in connection with the unit trust investment underlying the policy. You the insured must pay'.

Sure enough, when the policy matured this year, I did have to pay. This magic formula, presumably composed by a lawyer, worked. But who said lawyers were literate?

Yours faithfully,

P. A. TOWSEY, B.COM., F.C.A., Professor of Accountancy,
University of Singapore.

Singapore 10.

Integration

SIR, – It may be of interest to your readers to see the following extract from the issue of The South African Chartered Accountant of June 1970:

'Under present arrangements, members of the English and Scottish Institutes who come to South Africa have only to pass the Board's special examination in the law of the Republic to permit them to join one of the Societies. A special committee of the National Council was constituted to examine the position which may arise in the future and it has reported back emphatically that we should admit to membership only those persons who have passed the final examination of the English or Scottish Institutes and the Board's special examination in law. This will debar those persons who become members of the English or Scottish Institutes through absorption, from joining our Society unless they pass further examinations and serve articles.

'Likewise, in the future, members of those Institutes who are in the second tier will not be eligible for membership of a South African Society unless they pass the final examination of the top tier.'

Yours faithfully,

London EC2.

H. O. H. COULSON.

Electronic Calculator with Faster Print-out

THE SIXTH new product to be announced this year by the Friden Division of the Singer Company, as part of its world-wide 'Product-a-month' campaign, is a new electronic calculator, the Model 1154.

Featuring a substantially increased printing speed of 47 characters per second, the 1154 is a development of the well-known 1150 which was introduced two years ago. Like its predecessor, the new calculator is a highly sophisticated unit capable of a wide range of calculating functions. It is ideal for invoicing, bonus calculations, stores requisitioning, stock sheets, interest and foreign exchange calculations and all work which requires a written record of calculations as they are made.

The 1154 retains the Friden stacking principle which allows up to three intermediate answers to be stored for later use. This eliminates the danger of incorrect re-entry on multi-part problems. There is also a memory register for the retention of constants. Answers are computed to a pre-selected decimal place and rounded off automatically.

The price of the 1154 is £520, with a full year's guarantee. Leasing and hire-purchase facilities are also available.

Friden Ltd, Friden House, 101 Blackfriars Road, London SE1.

Speedier Accounting Routines

THE ODHNER 3434, a new book-keeping and analysis machine from Block & Anderson, is a sophisticated version of the standard Odhner book-keeping machine. Extremely flexible in use, it has 15 electronic registers, enabling group accounting routines to be run without pre-sorting, reducing the possibility of errors. Modular facilities are available to increase storage up to 95 registers as required.

The electronic registers have no moving parts, and are made from banks of tiny integrated circuits, giving high speed transmission. They can be cleared in a single operation, and each register has a setting capacity of 11 digits and credit balance.

A standard international ten-keyboard is used, and only a few operational keys are needed to supplement the figure-setting keys. The registers can be loaded and printed out by programming or directly from the keyboard, and transfer is possible between all registers. Any groups of registers can be progressively printed out on command from the keyboard.

The Odhner 3434 is particularly suitable for sales and bought ledger, payrolls, incomplete accounts and analysis.

Block & Anderson Ltd, Hammersmith, London W6.

Offset Duplicators

LATEST in the range of Gestetner office offset duplicators are Models 210 and 211 which, in replacing previous models 200 and 201, have been restyled and finished in a new two-tone beige colour scheme. Enlarged colour-coded controls and a lengthened main operating lever have been added for easier operation, and both duplicators are fitted with new universal plate cylinders to accept both pin-bar and straight-edged plates.

An interesting feature of the 211 is an electrically operated deflector which automatically eliminates the possibility of more than single sheet entry, and positive control of the sheet is ensured by seven grippers. To improve suspension and rolling power, the inking train has been redesigned and now incorporates an extra roller. A great advantage of both machines is that they have optional interchangeable inking units, which can reduce delay between different colour runs to only three minutes.

Paper sizes can range from 3×5 in. to $11 \times 15\frac{1}{2}$ in., with a maximum image area of $9\frac{3}{4} \times 13\frac{1}{4}$ in., and there is a feedboard capacity of one ream in the case of the 210, and 5,000 sheets for the 211.

Prices are £790 for the Model 210, and £1,525 for the 211.

Gestetner Duplicators Ltd, PO Box 23, Gestetner House, 210 Euston Road, London NW1.

Low Cost Photocopier for the Smaller Office

DESIGNED to meet the needs of the smaller office for copying almost any type of printed matter, including illustrations in any colour, the Model 151F produces dry copies by the 3M dual spectrum process of light exposure and heat development. This process requires no chemicals or powders, and operation is by exposing a sheet of copy paper at a dialled setting and then feeding it through the development slots.

Although the maximum image area is $8\frac{1}{2} \times 13$ in., copies from larger originals could be produced in sections, and the flat top will accept bound books or magazines for copying without their removal from the binding. The price is £79.

New Folding Machine

'FOLDALL' is an appropriate name for a fast office folding machine which Elliott Business Machines Ltd have just added to their range of mail preparation equipment. For any company or organization sending out invoices, statements, direct mail, news bulletins and similar communications this machine would be economical to use, as well as protecting staff from tedious and soul-destroying chores.

Due to its electrical operation, the Foldall will handle any one- or two-stage horizontal folding requirements with a high degree of accuracy and speed. All the usual commercial folds – including double and accordion folds – can be produced at a rate of up to 100 items a minute, and it takes papers in sizes ranging from less than A5 up to 9×18 inches. In addition, the machine is equipped to perforate, score or slit, even if folding is not required.

The manufacturers claim that 5,000 accounts statements can be perforated, folded, scored and stacked ready for insertion into envelopes in less than an hour. Desk space needed for the operation is 15×31 inches. The machine is priced at £125.

Elliott Business Machines Ltd, Browells Lane, Feltham, Middlesex.

Range of Decimal Adding Machines

A COMPLETE range of adding and add/listing machines which are new to this country have just been introduced by the Victor Sales Division of Lows Business Machines Ltd. This range of machines which has been known on the North American market for a number of years are all decimal machines and includes ten-key and full keyboard models.

In addition, this company supplies printing and electronic display models of calculators with varying characteristics for decimal mode.

Victor Sales Division, Lows Business Machines Ltd, Craven House, 121 Kingsway, London WC2.

Letter and Parcel Scales

INTRODUCED with a view to cutting costs in the post room through increased accuracy in weighing, Neopost scales are available in two models: the LPS 40 for both letters and parcels, and the PS40 for parcels only. Dials show both shillings and pence and all pence values so that conversion to decimals is a simple matter and can be used with the all-pence franking machines now in use. These units are similar to ones already in use on Post Office counters.

Roneo-Neopost Ltd, Lion House, Red Lion Street, Richmond, Surrey.

BIRMINGHAM STUDENTS' NEW PRESIDENT

MR GRAHAM WITHNALL, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., was elected President of the Birmingham Chartered Accountant Students' Society for 1970-71 at the Society's annual meeting held last Friday.

On leaving Up-pingham School, he spent two years with a company in Egypt, having expressed the view to his father, who was a chartered accountant, that accountancy was not to his liking. However, on returning home for family reasons in 1930, he changed his mind about the profession and entered articles with Foster & Stephens, of Birmingham.

Mr Withnall tells us that somewhere in the archives is the original letter advising him to commence work on February 3rd, 1930, at a premium of £150 with a salary at the rate of £10 per annum, payable weekly. Rates have certainly changed!

Admitted to membership of the Institute in 1935, he became a partner in Foster & Stephens three years later and is now a partner in Touche Ross & Co, of Birmingham, following the amalgamation of his old firm.

Throughout the last war he served with the RASC, mainly in the Middle East. Later, as a major, he took part in the liberation of Norway. After the war, he returned to the profession and in 1946 passed the examinations of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

Mr Withnall lists his recreations as golf, tennis and hockey. In the mid-1930s he captained the Students' Society hockey team.

Other officers elected for the ensuing year are:

Vice-President: Mr C. J. Peyton, F.C.A.
Chairman: Mr A. C. S. Hordern, F.C.A.
Secretary: Mr A. L. Greeves, Chartered Accountants' Library, Fountain Court, Steelhouse Lane, Birmingham.
Assistant Secretary: Mr David Hare.
Treasurer: Mr T. Webb.
Librarian: Mr Richard M. Goodenough.

Annual Report

Membership of the Society increased by 465 during the year and at April 30th numbered 2,655. This significant increase is due, states the committee's report, to the change of the Society's rules last year whereby all practising members of the district society automatically become members of the students' society.

The joint lecture committee, comprised equally of students and principals, organized three one-day courses, a three-day residential computer course at Nottingham University (The Accountant, December 25th) and the annual residential course at Merton College, Oxford (The Accountant, July 12th). All these courses were very well attended.

Principals gave a mixed reception to the Students' Rights Committee set up to deal with the welfare of students in articles. A salary survey carried out during the year – the results of which are still being gathered – 'caused concern amongst several principals'. This has meant that the 'Educational facilities' survey has been delayed for review by the senior society before circulation.

At sport, the Society has had, in the words of David Hare, the hardworking chairman of the sports subcommittee, 'an enjoyable and successful year'.

Social activities were again well supported and the annual winter ball, organized by Peter Bailey, was acclaimed the best the Society has ever held.

CLAY PIGEON SHOOTING AND GLIDING

THE Scarborough Branch of The Chartered Accountants' Students' Society of Kingston upon Hull have arranged a clay pigeon shoot at Gristhorpe on August 9th. Those members of the Branch as well as the Society who would care to try their skills should contact John Goodacre, c/o Buckley, Hall, Devin & Co, 17 Pavilion Square, Scarborough. Telephone Scarborough 64341.

Also during next month, the Branch is hoping to arrange a visit to Scarborough Gliding Club; the more members who attend, the lower will be the cost. Those wishing to be participants or spectators should contact John Goodacre.

SUMMER BALL

As previously announced in The Accountant, the Summer Ball of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London takes place on August 7th at Grosvenor House, Park Lane, from 10.30 p.m. to 3 a.m. Reproduced below is the imaginative design for the tickets and posters drawn by Christine Dent, younger sister of Ann Dent, A.C.A., immediate Past Chairman of the Society.

Dancing will be to 'The Sessioneers', a steel band, and a discothèque, and all chartered accountant students, whether members of the Society or not, are invited to attend. Double tickets, price £4 4s, include a midnight supper. The Accountant is donating the prizes for the tombola.

SOUTH EASTERN RESIDENTIAL COURSES

RESIDENTIAL revision courses for members of the South Eastern Chartered Accountant Students' Society are to be held at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, for Final Part I and II students from September 14th to 18th, and for Intermediate students from December 7th to 11th. Both these courses will be run from mid-day, Monday to Friday. There will also be one evening meeting with buffet supper on Mondays.

The courses, which have been organized by the South Eastern Society of Chartered Accountants, are also open to students from other societies. The Society is prepared to make a grant towards travelling and hotel expenses for those outside the Brighton area.

The courses have, in the past, been very successful and those wishing to attend should apply without delay to Mr R. H. Buxton, F.C.A., assistant secretary, South Eastern Society of Chartered Accountants, 15 Wrotham Road, Gravesend, Kent.

LONDON STUDENTS WIN BIRMINGHAM MATCH

On July 8th, the Birmingham Chartered Accountant Students' Society took on a Chartered Accountant

Students' Society of London cricket XI at Solihull cricket and tennis club.

London batted first and scored briskly on a good batting wicket and their captain, Andrew Jenner, declared at 227 for 7. Birmingham started badly, losing two wickets in the first couple of overs. Paul Burman, however, literally 'stuck' to the wicket and scored eight runs in about two hours!

However, he was joined by John Walker-Roberts who started hitting the London bowling all over the ground. Then, when he had scored 67 runs, he was well caught trying for yet another boundary. After that Birmingham collapsed, and were all out for 162; London had avenged their last year's defeat with seven minutes to spare.

Birmingham CASS are travelling to Sheffield on August 20th to play cricket and tennis. On the following Wednesday, August 26th, a six-a-side cricket tournament is being held at Solihull for Birmingham firms.

MANCHESTER'S SPORTS ACTIVITIES

THE Manchester Chartered Accountants Students' Society is to hold a triangular sports match with the Liverpool and Preston students' societies, incorporating squash, tennis and cricket matches - the date for which has been provisionally fixed as August 26th. Also during August, an inter-office 11-a-side soccer tournament has been arranged in which it is hoped as many as 16 teams will take part. Already 12 teams have entered for the tournament. It is possible that there will be a shortage of match referees and anyone willing to assist in these duties should contact the sports secretary, J. Walmsley, at the Library, 46 Fountain Street, Manchester.

In addition to the above events, the Society is in process of organizing a fast walking and mountaineering section under the leadership of Mike Tomlinson, the Social Committee's Chairman. Further details from the sports secretary.

IN PARLIAMENT

State Graduated Pension Scheme: Employers' Contributions

SIR B. RHYS WILLIAMS asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the band of income over which employers are obliged to pay earnings-related contributions in respect of employees contracted into the State graduated pension scheme; what is the percentage of the income within the band which they contribute; and what is his estimate of the yield of employers' contributions to the scheme in 1970-71.

MR DEAN: Employees participating fully in the State graduated pension scheme and their employers each pay graduated contributions at the rates of 4½ per cent of earnings falling between £9 and £18 a week and 3¼ per cent of earnings between £18 and £30 a week; the estimated yield of employers' contributions to the scheme in 1970-71 is about £390 million.

SIR B. RHYS WILLIAMS asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of employees contracted into the State graduated pension scheme; and what is the number contracted out.

MR DEAN: About 10¼ million employed men and 7¼ million women are not contracted out of the State graduated pension scheme and 9¼ million and 5¼ million respectively of these pay graduated contributions; and 4¾ million men and ¾ million women are contracted out and pay graduated contributions at a reduced rate.

welcomes the intention of the new Government to extend the use of advanced management techniques. Such techniques, Mr Maynard points out, can do much to improve the deployment of the nation's resources and ensure that better value for money is obtained for public expenditure. In this context he lists such techniques as programme budgeting, management by objectives, and the whole field of management science – especially computer-based mathematical models which can be of great assistance in reaching decisions on complex problems of the type facing governments today.

Datafair 71 – the fourth conference of the series – is to be held at Nottingham University from March 29th to April 2nd, 1971. For the first time there will be an equipment exhibition in addition to the programme of industrial presentations.

A brochure setting out terms and conditions for industrial companies who wish to participate may be obtained from Datafair 71 Conference Office, The British Computer Society, 29 Portland Place, London W1.

HOCKEY

Purley 2

With four players who also belonged to the opponent's club, the CAs drew with Purley in the first of their two summer matches. Purley opened the scoring but Gallant at once raced through to equalize. Purley again took the lead before half-time.

Major played a useful first game on the wing and Harris was always attacking, but it was not until after several near misses by the forwards that Robson scored a captain's goal to draw the match.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Technical Advisory Committee

The 166th meeting of the Technical Advisory Committee was held in the Council Chamber, Chartered Accountants' Hall, London EC2, on Wednesday, July 15th. There were present:

Mr D. Napper (in the chair); Messrs R. B. Arrowsmith, T. Bailey, G. Bar, N. F. Beecham, K. G. Bishop, M. T. R. Brookman, B. H. Buckley, J. Burgoyne, P. J. Cavanna, M. A. Charlton, I. F. H. Davison, C. C. Dobson, N. J. Edwards, N. Cassleton Elliott, R. Firth, C. R. P. Goodwin, J. H. Hewitt, Halmer Hudson, A. P. Hughes, H. B. Huntington-Whiteley, D. J. Ironside, W. W. W. Martin, K. Mashford, E. R. Nicholson, R. D. Pearce, M. Sheppard, F. A. Sherring, K. A. Sherwood, D. H. Slade, K. R. Stanley, T. P. Thomas, G. H. Vieler, B. W. Waters, and R. F. Watkins, with Mr G. A. Slator (Secretary to the Committee). Mr A. T. Reed attended by invitation.

President's Address

The President of the Institute, Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., attended the opening of the meeting. In reply to a speech of welcome by the Chairman, the President said:

'Thank you, Mr Chairman, for your very kind introduction. I was a member of this committee, or rather its predecessor, for one year – 1955–56, I think – and Honorary Secretary of my regional committee for some five or six years. You and your regional committees not only provide your Council with an invaluable additional link with the membership but are, so to speak, the forum upon which we rely to help us to get straight our thinking upon most technical matters. You have to deal with the revision of statements for the Members' Handbook and the issue of new ones; matters concerning taxation and company law are always with you.

'The new Government, I hope, will soon be calling for our help with these matters. The improvement of auditing and accounting standards generally has become a pressing matter and now there has been set up the Accounting Standards Steering Committee – you have its first exposure draft on your agenda today and there are something like 22–23 more to follow over the next 2–3 years.'

The President then referred to the role of the Accounting Standards Steering Committee and the importance of the issue of statements of standard accounting practice and to the contribution which the Technical Advisory Committee would be able to make. The President continued:

'The question of integration is not directly your concern but, whichever way the vote goes, it does seem likely that we shall be entering upon another era for the accountancy profession, and this will inevitably call for further work and thought from you.

'Mr Chairman, thank you and your committee for all the help you have given and are giving to us. From what I can see of the year ahead it is going to be a very busy, but I think, too, a very interesting one.'

Membership

The chairman extended a warm welcome to the following members who were attending for the first time: Messrs T. Bailey, N. F. Beecham, I. F. H. Davison, C. C. Dobson, W. W. W. Martin, B. W. Waters.

Matters considered

Consideration was given to a report and memorandum on 'Audits of building societies' and an exposure draft 'Proposed statement of standard accounting practice: Accounting for the Results of Associated Companies'.

Future meetings

It was noted that meetings of the committee had been provisionally arranged for Thursdays, October 15th, 1970, December 3rd, 1970, January 28th, 1971, April 1st, 1971, and May 27th, 1971.

AN IMPORTANT BOOK FOR MANAGEMENT

PLANNING FOR PROFITS

by DOUGLAS GARBUTT, A.C.I.S., A.C.W.A.

ANOTHER BOOK IN THE GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

This book presents an unusual combination of sound theory and practical common sense. For every businessman, but especially the manager in the smaller firm, it outlines a simple system which can give effective profit planning. With this system, a manager can fix fair and accurate prices, and can decide which orders offer him most profit and which least. Costs can be established and comparisons made which will spotlight inefficiencies. Development of effective, logical and acceptable cost standards can be made to which all members of the firm can conform.

Direct costing overcomes many of the drawbacks of conventional costing systems and the author advocates a system of simple charts which offer a flexible basis for profit-planning.

The author has a remarkable combination of qualifications for writing this book: it is based on first-hand consultancy work which he undertook by virtue of his qualifications as a Cost Accountant and Chartered Secretary.

He is, however, also a lecturer with many years of full- and part-time teaching experience. He has been Acting Technical Officer for the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and is well known for the many articles which he has contributed to the technical press. Finally, he is a qualified teacher and holds an Academic Diploma in Education.

This book is recommended for the benefit of the businessman and manager who is concerned with establishing and maintaining profit objectives for his business. It should also appeal to students who wish to understand the techniques of planning for profits and who are interested in how they can be applied in practice.

Your new accountancy qualification should make all the difference...

... and provided you make the right decision on how best to reach your career objectives, it certainly will.

One of the more adventurous choices open to you, now you've passed your finals, is to join an international professional firm and work on the Continent of Europe.

You are unlikely to find a better combination of ways of moulding your professional capabilities and your personality. Real advantage for a Chartered Accountant lies in this combination, this blend of professional and personal development in an unfamiliar environment.

You will acquire comprehensive audit experience on examinations of subsidiaries of US and UK companies. The chance of early promotion completes a picture worth careful consideration.

When you take a special challenge, you expect a special reward. We—and Europe—have everything to offer, on both counts.

Please write for an application form to C.J. Daintree, European Staff Partner, Price Waterhouse & Co., 47, Avenue de l'Opéra, Paris 2ème.

A country achieving greatness: Accountants for Canada

The professional climate in Canada is unique. Clearly there is much potential for professional skill.

Perhaps possibilities for qualified accountants over there are best illustrated by a survey made among recently migrated professional people. All said they were better off financially, and that opportunities for advancement were abundant. One man put it very well when he said he preferred a developing country to a developed one.

We need men with the same preference in the two main commercial centres: Montreal and Toronto. We offer you an attractive starting salary, wide variety of work, and excellent opportunities to enlarge your knowledge of accountancy and management through specialist training as well as experience.

In a country busy achieving greatness, your knowledge and ambition are worth a great deal.

Please send full particulars to Price Waterhouse & Co., 3, Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London, EC2.

ACCOUNTANTS for MIDDLE EAST

A large British oil company operating in a number of countries in the Middle East offers interesting openings to qualified accountants in its overseas areas of operation.

Vacancies exist in the financial and Management accounting fields and initial responsibilities would relate to general accounting or budgeting and costing or internal audit work. Opportunities exist for advancement to senior positions not necessarily confined to a particular country or to the finance function.

Candidates, aged 28-35, should hold a University Degree and a recognised qualification in Accountancy. A minimum of 3 years' professional or industrial experience is desirable.

Terms and conditions are excellent; local remuneration being commensurate with qualifications and experience but not less than £375 per month (net of local tax); approximately 7 weeks' annual leave with paid passages, contributory Pension Fund; assistance with children's education. Married or bachelor accommodation provided at moderate rental.

Write, giving full details of age, qualifications, and experience, to Box No. A/3746, c/o Charles Barker & Sons Ltd, Recruitment Division, 20 Cannon Street, London EC4.

SIERRA LEONE

International firm has vacancies for qualified accountants in Sierra Leone. The work is interesting and varied, offering opportunities for a career. Initial tour of 18 months with generous paid leave. Salaries and benefits will provide a good standard of living and margin for saving. - Please apply Box SL 12703.

A profitable trek for accountants- South Africa

For just-qualified men, salaries will be between R4800 and R6000 pa, according to location. Experience since qualifying will mean increases accordingly. Salaries are by no means the only attraction of a two-year spell in South Africa. Our practice there is a thriving and expansive one, using the most advanced techniques in a fast-expanding economy.

We offer an ideal professional environment for ambition. The country offers the ideal living environment—climate, scenery, housing, social amenities. Fares by sea or air will be paid, also return fares after two or three years' service. A settling-in allowance will also be paid.

Annual leave is three weeks, plus two weeks at the end of two years' service; additional overseas leave is granted for long service.

There are medical aid and insurance schemes and a non-contributory pension scheme for permanent staff.

Please write to Price Waterhouse & Co.,
3 Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London EC2, quoting reference OS/704.

Young accountants couldn't be appreciated more, in Australia

Australia is a fortunate country. It has the natural wealth of a new continent, the potential of vast space, and all the experience of Europe and America to draw on.

In this unusual combination of circumstances, the professions are given new impetus - resulting in a more than favourable atmosphere for the young qualified man with extra ambition for rapid advancement.

We need such men in many of the main commercial centres - Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane and Perth. We offer you an attractive starting salary, wide variety of work, and excellent opportunities to enlarge your knowledge of accountancy and management, through specialist training as well as experience.

Providing you take full advantage of the opportunities presented, Australia will be most appreciative!

Please write for an appointment with one of our Australian partners who will be here during July and August. Price Waterhouse & Co., 3 Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London EC2.

Internal Audit in Zambia

Chief Internal Auditor from £5,000

Two Internal Auditors from £3,600

An opportunity to work overseas while staying in the forefront on new Internal Audit technique development.

In the Centralised Services Division of Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines Limited a new Accounting and Finance organisation has recently been established. The Chief Internal Auditor will be responsible to the Head of Accounting and Finance for the formation and development of an Internal Audit Department within this organisation. The department will have two sections, one of which will be located at the central office in Kitwe serving two Divisions of the Company and the second will be located in Chingola serving another two Divisions. Each office will be managed by an Internal Auditor reporting to the Chief Internal Auditor.

About 200 employees are engaged in the accounting activities of the Company and about 20 accountants may be involved by Internal Audit. We employ a powerful IBM 360 model 65 computer for both scientific and accounting work. Practically all accounting routines are performed by the computer including a fully integrated cost and financial accounting system. This presents an interesting challenge to Internal Auditors wishing to gain experience in developing audit techniques for computer systems. We are therefore looking for men who have a fresh and original approach to their discipline and who are not afraid of tackling something new.

We wish to fill the three vacancies with qualified accountants having the above qualities and who can demonstrate practical industrial audit experience. They will preferably be now leading an internal audit department or section in a fair sized company which makes use of mechanised accounting systems although accountants working in a professional practice who feel that they measure up to our requirements are also invited to apply.

Starting Salaries

Chief Internal Auditor - not less than Kwacha 8,600 per annum (in excess of £5,000)

Internal Auditors - not less than Kwacha 6,200 per annum (in excess of £3,600)

In addition there is a Christmas bonus, and terminal gratuity. Exchange Control Regulations allow the repatriation of up to 50% of gross earnings to the U.K. either monthly or annually.

Benefits

- * Education and Educational travel allowances
- * Housing at low rental
- * Generous leave conditions
- * Excellent medical facilities
- * Return paid passages
- * Free Life Assurance.

Recreation

The sunny climate of Zambia, the full social life, and many sports and cultural activities make for a most enjoyable time. Swimming, golf, tennis, sailing, amateur theatre; these are just a few ways in which you can live a really satisfying off-duty life.

Contracts are for a period of three years, renewable by mutual agreement, and the appointments are to be taken up in Autumn 1970.

Interviews will be arranged with the Head of Accounting and Finance who will be visiting London from Zambia.

Please write giving full details of professional qualifications and experience to:

International Appointments Division, Charter Consolidated Limited, Dept. NN 9281, 7 Rolls Buildings, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.4.

- OTHER BENEFITS include three months' paid leave after each two year tour, provident fund, rent subsidy, free medical schemes, car and furniture loans.

Applications, which will be treated in confidence, should be marked reference HK/CA and sent to the Staff Partner, 11 Ironmonger Lane, London, E.C.2.

Chartered Accountants For South Africa

A large firm of Chartered Accountants (South Africa) with offices in other centres of the Republic, have vacancies in their Johannesburg office for qualified accountants who wish to broaden their professional experience in a country with a rapidly growing economy and one which offers great opportunities both within the profession and in commerce and industry. The firm offers:—

- Competitive salaries in the range R5,100 to R6,900 (approximately £3,000 to £4,000) per annum.
- Air fares to South Africa for the applicant and his family.
- A settling-in allowance of R500 in the case of married men and R300 in the case of single men (approximately £290 and £175 respectively).
- Return air fares after two years service or an equivalent cash bonus.
- Four weeks annual leave.
- Provident fund and medical aid benefits.

The above terms are conditional upon the applicant entering into a contract for a two year appointment.

Please write to the Staff Partner, P.O. Box 2636, Johannesburg. Interviews can be arranged in London. Further information, if required, can be obtained from Messrs. Thomson McLintock & Co., 33 King William Street, London, E.C.4. (Telephone 01-626-3232).

Have you thought of working in Europe?

We have offices in Paris, Milan, Rome, Brussels, The Hague, Copenhagen, Dusseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Zurich and Madrid.

The advantages of working in Europe are manifold. You can weekend in places which previously you could only visit on your annual holidays. Above all you will broaden your outlook by absorbing a new mode of living. You need only speak English as you will be able to learn other languages naturally and easily, at our expense.

We have a comprehensive professional development programme and you will obtain experience in the latest audit techniques and in American and Continental accounting and auditing procedures. Opportunities exist for subsequent secondment for training to one of our U.S. offices.

Because of our continued expansion, promotion prospects are excellent. The starting salary for all recently qualified Chartered Accountants is not less than the equivalent of £3,000 per annum with considerably more for men with greater experience.

YOUNG CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

(Qualified or Finalists)

Arthur Andersen was a prominent figure in updating accounting thought and service. As a result, the organization that bears his name has expanded rapidly and now enjoys a world-wide reputation for progressive leadership and employee training.

Its London office now needs young and ambitious businessmen (in their early 20's) to join their Audit and Taxation divisions.

Training: A second to none internal programme. This year, the introductory three-week course is being held near Paris.

Prospects: You'll have early responsibility and should reach manager status after 3 years, when you'll be earning at least £3,750. Another 8 years and you may be offered a partnership—a large number of the partners are in their thirties.

Interested? Then write now to the firm for more detailed information, for the attention of: David Steele, St. Alphage House, 2, Fore Street, London, E.C.2.

WHERE THERE'S GROWTH THERE'S OPPORTUNITY.

Young Accountants

Thomson McLintock & Co. have vacancies for qualified accountants (and finalists with a successful examination record to date). Initially the work will be mainly auditing of a wide variety of public and private companies. There are early opportunities for experience of computers and of investigation work.

The work is demanding but is matched by above average remuneration and carefully planned training, which although geared primarily to the requirements of the man planning to remain in a practising firm, will prove valuable to the accountant moving into industry. For those interested in travelling there are opportunities overseas in our international firm after an initial period in the U.K. In the longer term the prospects for the able man to win promotion are outstanding in a rapidly expanding firm.

Write, giving brief career details, to:—

M. G. Adamson,
33 King William Street,
London, E.C.4.

Apart from London there are vacancies at present in our offices in Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and Sunderland. Interviews will be arranged at the office concerned.

WE KNOW THE FIRMS THAT COUNT!

Our clients in the profession keep us regularly informed of their staff requirements. We have vacancies in the City, the West End, and in the Provinces.

These are at all levels, from articled clerks and semi-seniors to managers and potential partners – also opportunities to specialize. There are particularly promising openings on the taxation side.

wishes to make a contribution. This quarterly review in English, French, and German, has published or is due to publish the following articles in 1970:

- Special audit techniques using computers.
- Is the second proposed directive of the EEC on the structure of a limited company and the maintenance, increase and reduction of its capital an important step towards the harmonisation of company law?
- Consolidated Accounts in Germany.
- Statistical sampling: a method for auditors.
- The task of the accountant in business administration.
- The Amendment of the Law relating to Statutory Audits of the Accounts of French Companies.
- Further education in management consultancy – a challenge to the profession.
- Reform of Swedish Company Law.
- Investment consultancy as a professional activity.
- Proposals regarding the rationalisation of technical tasks necessitated by international conferences.
- Amendment of Italian Company Law in accordance with the first Directive by the European Community on publication of documents and statements, validity of contracts and avoidance of the company (S.A. and S.A.R.L.).
- Definition of the auditor's professional duties, as dealt with by the proposals put forward by the European Community 'International Merger', 'Structure of public limited companies', and 'Statutes of a European company.'

A Daunting Inheritance

NEITHER the tragic event which brought Mr Anthony Barber to No. 11 Downing Street, nor the reports on the state of the economy prepared by his Treasury advisers can give the new Chancellor any satisfaction. However gruelling and complex the negotiations with the Common Market ministers and officials may have been, the problems in the domestic economy are likely to prove just as intractable.

The one consolation for the new Chancellor is that the House of Commons is in recess until October and he has time, therefore, to brief himself thoroughly before he is exposed to the widespread criticisms which a stagnant economy, rising unemployment, mounting prices and inflationary wage settlements will inevitably generate.

The latest issue of Economic Outlook prepared by the experts of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development will not bring Mr Barber any cheer. In its review of the balance of payments situation in the western world it notes that 'price inflation is an old problem which has now acquired new dimensions and a new urgency. The last twelve months have witnessed the most pronounced and general price rise experienced since the Korean War.' It adds that the strength of the inflationary forces generated over the last two or three years has been consistently underestimated.

Not surprisingly, in the light of such an assessment, Economic Outlook concludes that demand restraint remains necessary. In view of the pressure from the CBI and the TUC for early reflation of the UK economy, the comment in the report that 'there has been a very frequent tendency to underestimate the impact of expansionary action' is significant. It is highly probable that the late Mr Macleod received similar warnings from the Treasury when he first put forward his hopes for an autumn Budget. Certainly nothing in the review of the UK economy contained in the Bank of England report for the year ended February 28th, 1970, suggests otherwise, least of all its comment that the competitive advantage conferred upon British exporters by the devaluation could be whittled away.

Whether British industry is more strike-prone than other countries is not certain, but the Bank of England report commented on the 'disturbing increase' in industrial disputes which so far shows no sign of abating. The OECD publication comments that the problem of inflation today 'arises in part from the unparalleled success of modern economies in achieving high and rapidly rising living standards which give rise to high expectations for the future'. It notes that efforts to create incomes policies to check the inflationary pressures have had only limited success, and adds that 'the alternatives may prove unworkable or unacceptable'.

It is with public expectations that the new Chancellor will have his greatest problems. Looking ahead at the UK economy, Economic Outlook expects a rise in the gross domestic product of nearly 4 per cent, with some reduction in unemployment. On the other hand, it comments that 'it is difficult to see the advance in wage rates decelerating greatly from annual rates of 10 per cent and over'. More recent developments in the UK since the Outlook went to press suggest that the foregoing forecast could somewhat overestimate the real growth of output and underestimate the price increase.

The plain truth of the matter is that the new Government's hopes of containing the inflationary pressures and trimming taxes depend ultimately on increasing the rate of growth in the UK economy. The latest figures, which indicate a virtual absence of growth and an inadequate rate of industrial investment, make it clear that recent policies have failed. The question is, what can be done? The docks dispute and its outcome will once again demonstrate to the rank and file industrial worker that militancy pays, albeit at someone else's expense. Any significant degree of reflation which reduces total unemployment can only intensify the inflationary forces.

Hoped-for cuts in taxation will increase private consumption and doubtless lead to some stimulation of industrial output. The problem remains, however, what would then happen to imports? World forces which enabled the UK so signally to improve its external payments position will not remain so favourable indefinitely. Economic Outlook draws attention to the need for international agreement on trade policies if the US trade deficit is reversed, as surely it will be, with all that such a development implies for the rest of the world.

The fact that most of the advanced economies of the world are suffering from the same problems as the UK, in greater or lesser degree, is little consolation. Inflation among her competitors will doubtless give the UK more time to adapt to the needs of the times, but it remains to be seen whether Mr Barber can use the breathing space to good effect. These problems go far beyond the restructuring of the tax system and the cutting back of Government expenditure.

Trends in Government Expenditure

ATTENTION inside and outside the House of Commons has concentrated on the new Government's declaration that it intended to check the growth of public sector expenditure. In particular, Mr Barber has inherited his late predecessor's task to carry out a thorough-going review of all departmental expenditure.

The public sector's share of the gross national product has been rising rapidly in recent years; the previous Government lifted the proportion of the gross national product taken by the public sector to over a half. That experience is not unique, however, for in all the OECD countries, government expenditure has been rising faster than total production.

In a supplement to the Economic Outlook, trends in public expenditure are examined for all the OECD countries, Japan and the USA. Only in Japan did the rate of growth in government expenditure during the period 1955-65 fail to exceed the growth of the gross national product. Elsewhere, for example in Norway, the former figure rose 40 per cent faster than the latter; for several countries the growth rate in government expenditure was 30 per cent higher than the rate of increase in the gross national product.

A breakdown of total expenditure in 1965 reveals that in every country, including the USA, defence expenditure has declined as a proportion of total spending. Defence costs in the UK in that year took almost 17 per cent of total government expenditure compared with 27 per cent in the USA and 11 per cent in Germany, but only 4 per cent in Japan.

Given the cut-back in defence expenditures in recent years, it is clear that similar economies for financing growing welfare expenditures are no longer available. The rate of growth in social security transfer payments during the period 1955-65 is reflected in the increased proportion of private consumption accounted for by such payments. For the UK the percentage rose from 7.5 to 10.3, while in the United States the increase was from 5.1 to 7.1. Some indication of the potential size of such transfers may be gleaned from the fact that in the latest year the percentages for Austria and France exceeded 20 per cent.

The forces contributing to the growth of government expenditure are common to all OECD countries. Thus the economically dependent groups (the young and the retired) constitute a rising proportion of the population, hence the need for public sector housing and other infra-structure is correspondingly increased. The numbers of young people in receipt of higher education coupled with government desire to improve educational facilities, is making education one of the most expensive of all government services.

No one can believe that the situation will change in the years ahead. Demographic factors and the demand for ever-improving services in the education and health fields will ensure that government financial demands will continue to grow. There may well be some waste in government departments, just as there is in any large organization. But even in the unlikely event that waste was completely eliminated, the taxpayer will still find himself facing a mounting bill from the Government.

Current Affairs

Back Duty Go Slow

THE number of back duty cases listed for future action increased progressively from 9,300 at March 31st, 1966, to 18,900, 28,600 and 31,000 respectively at the same date in each of the following years. Over the same period the annual number of completed cases of fraud and evasion declined from 11,618 to 8,983. This further evidence of the pressures created for the Inland Revenue by the introduction of complex and burdensome tax legislation in recent years is given in the Report of the Committee of Public Accounts (Session 1969-70) published last week (HMSO 72s).

Questioned by the Committee on the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General (The Accountant, January 29th), in particular about the deferment of back duty inquiries, the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, Sir Arnold France, K.C.B., said this was postponement, not abandonment. He could not, however, say whether the lapse of the six-year time limit would in the event reduce the amount of tax which could be recovered.

District Inspectors of Taxes had been instructed to defer some of the back duty inquiries while the pressure of other work was on them. The choice of cases to be deferred lay with the individual inspector; he would not wish to become involved in a time-consuming case if he was under pressure from other work. The tendency was to deal with big cases involving large sums of money if they were not too complicated.

Sir Arnold said he did not know when the department would be back to normal on this aspect of its work. The Committee expressed concern at this situation because investigations become more difficult the longer they are deferred. At the same time the Committee appreciated the difficulties brought about by the shortage of fully trained inspectors and accepted that no immediate solution of the problem was possible. They trusted, however, that normal procedures would be restored and that the cases listed for investigation would be rapidly cleared as soon as problems associated with recent legislation had been overcome.

The Committee regarded as of paramount importance that the staff of the Inland Revenue Department should at all times be approved at a level adequate to discharge the duties laid upon it, and that strenuous efforts should be made to recruit to full establishment. They welcomed the investigation which was to take place into the general staffing position of the department.

The New Chancellor

THE new Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Rt Hon. Anthony Barber, P.C., T.D., is already a familiar front-bench figure. He held office in the last Conservative Government, successively as Economic Secretary to the Treasury, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and, with Cabinet rank, as Minister of Health. In opposition, he was his party's principal spokesman on trade and power, and following last month's General Election he was appointed to head the British negotiations for entry to the European Common Market.

Born in 1920, Mr Barber served with distinction in the Second World War and took his law degree with first-class honours whilst a prisoner. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1948, and entered Parliament in 1951 as Conservative MP for Doncaster. In 1963 he was created a Privy Councillor. He has represented Altrincham and Sale since 1965, and was elected chairman of the Conservative party organization in 1967.

There is no doubt of Mr Barber's capacity, by virtue both of his personal qualities and of his previous Treasury and Cabinet experience, to assume the Chancellor's mantle.

Accountant Minister of Technology

MR JOHN DAVIES, M.B.E., F.C.A., J.DIP.M.A., the new Minister of Technology, takes up a senior appointment only a matter of weeks after his election as a Member of Parliament. He has been chosen by the Prime Minister to succeed Mr Geoffrey Rippon, who is now destined to lead the negotiations on the Common Market.

Admitted a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1939, Mr Davies then served in the Army during the Second World War. Following demobilization, he joined British Petroleum (then the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co) in 1946 and his progress was such that by 1962 he had become vice-chairman and managing director of Shell-Mex and B.P. In recent years he became a national figure as Director-General of the Confederation of British Industry.

New Look for National Savings

A NEW series of National Savings Certificates, to be known as the 'decimal issue', will be available from October 5th, 1970. These will have a nominal value of £1 each, increasing to £1.25 after four years, equivalent to $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent per annum free of tax, or $9\frac{3}{4}$ per cent gross at the present standard rate of income tax. The maximum individual holding will be 500 units.

Introducing the new issue in Parliament last week, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, Mr Maurice Macmillan, also announced extension terms for the existing series of certificates, equivalent in this case to $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent per annum free of tax or approximately $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent gross.

With effect from January 1st, 1971, the rate of interest on ordinary accounts with the Post Office Savings Bank will be increased to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum on those accounts remaining open until December 31st, 1971. Accounts closed before that date will earn the existing rate of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The annual amount of savings bank interest exempt from income tax (but not surtax) will be correspondingly increased from £15 to £21. Similar changes are to be made by the Trustee Savings Banks and by the Birmingham Municipal Bank.

Rural Industry

AMONGST the modern preoccupation with acquisitions and conglomerates to create even larger units, the economic contribution of the small rural firm with perhaps 20 skilled employees on the payroll is sometimes overlooked. The advantages claimed for such firms include their ability to undertake sub-contracting and short runs, and to provide for local needs reliably and quickly; their relative immunity from industrial disputes; and the creation of diverse openings for rural employment.

The Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas has recently issued its first report, covering a period of approximately two years from February 1968 to April 1970. CoSIRA is an advisory and credit service, financed from funds provided by the Government to assist small firms in rural areas of England and Wales. Its main aim is to help small firms to become more prosperous, and so to provide more jobs in the countryside. Its staff establishment includes 12 'advisory accountants', whose functions are the assessment of loan applications and the installation of efficient recording systems. During the period of the report, these accountants undertook a total of 4,300 visits.

Selective employment tax is castigated in the report as 'the most unpopular legislation affecting small industry in recent times'. The majority of rural firms embraced by CoSIRA are in the servicing trades and their ability to offer increased employment is impaired by the penal effect of SET.

Copies of the report are available from CoSIRA at 11 Cowley Street, London SW1, price 6s.

Sale of Turf Taxable

A FARMING company which sold $26\frac{1}{4}$ acres of turf two inches thick and then ploughed and drilled the land for corn, has been held by the High Court to be bound to include the proceeds of sale of the turf as a revenue trading receipt (Lowe v. J. W. Ashmore Ltd.).

The company bought a 96-acre farm in January 1962 for £14,950, nearly 60 acres of which was permanent pasture land. In 1963 a firm of contractors approached the company with an offer to buy turf at £75 per acre, which the company accepted in order to have more capital. The Revenue assessed the company on two alternative bases: under Case I on the footing that the £75 per acre was a trading receipt, and under Case VIII on the ground that the receipts fell within section 15 (1) (c) of the Finance Act 1963. The Special Commissioners held that the receipts were capital and not taxable under either case.

Last Monday, Mr Justice Megarry allowed the Revenue appeal from that decision. He held that the payment constituted 'annual profits or gains' and fell within Case I by virtue of section 124 (1) of the Income Tax Act 1952. His lordship also held that the oral agreement gave to the contractors a profit à prendre in gross to take the turf. This was a 'right to use any land' within section 15 of the Finance Act 1963.

The Revenue had agreed to pay the company's costs in any event, as it was a test case.

Accountants in Demand in Ireland

THE periodic index on appointments published by TMSL Ireland Ltd reports a fall of 10 per cent - from 668 to 602 - in the demand for managerial and technical staff in the second quarter of 1970; but the accountants may take comfort, as their profession alone shows an improved trend.

For accountants, the demand is for the first time higher than that in any other group. From 16 per cent in 1967 it has climbed to 24 per cent of the total for the quarter covered by the latest survey. It also shows a respectably high salary expectation where stated; in 21 per cent of the appointments salaries are quoted at £3,000 or more.

The demand for general managers remained steady at 10 per cent of the total, but 29 of the 38 appointments stating a salary were below £3,000, compared with 19 out of 34 in the same quarter last year. In research and development the demand fell 30 per cent, while in production it fell from 178 in the first quarter to 127, and personnel showed little change.

The practice of stating the salary offered is an indication of industrial maturity which is only slowly developing. Sixty-two per cent of the appointments offered in the quarter showed a figure compared with 51 per cent in the same quarter last year. As regards the overall salary bracket, however, where stated, less than 20 per cent of the total demands specified £3,000 or more.

More than a Settlement

THE income tax anti-avoidance provisions directed against settlements in sections 404-411 of the Income Tax Act 1952, defined 'settlement' as including:

'any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement or arrangement' (section 411 (2)).

For the purposes of the provisions a person is deemed to have made the settlement if he has made or entered into it directly or indirectly and in particular if he has provided or undertaken to provide funds directly or indirectly for the purpose of the settlement, or has made with any other person a reciprocal arrangement for that other person to make or enter into the settlement (section 411 (2)).

Mr Saul Wachtel on April 4th, 1960, settled £1,000 on his children. Next day the trustees purchased the whole of the issued capital of an investment company at a cost of £7,691. An arrangement had been made with the District Bank under which the taxpayer deposited

MAN OF ACCOUNT

Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., F.B.I.M., A.T.I.I.

MR IAN T. MORROW, C.A., F.C.W.A., F.B.I.M., A.T.I.I., who celebrated his 58th birthday last month, has been appointed executive vice-chairman of Rolls-Royce Ltd. As reported in The Accountant for July 16th and 23rd, the high level of Rolls-Royce research and development expenditure on the company's RB 211 jet aero-engine has recently been a cause of some concern to shareholders.

This is the latest addition to a roll of directorships which already includes H. Clarkson & Co Ltd, Associated Fire Alarms Ltd, Rowe Brothers and Crosfield Electronics, amongst others. Mr Morrow dislikes the term 'company doctor' and prefers to be known as a consultant, but by any description his record of successes in this field is an impressive one. Speaking of his new appointment, he said that he would probably spend two days a week with Rolls-Royce, or 'as much as the job requires'. His principal responsibilities will be financial control and management organization.

Mr Morrow qualified as a Scottish chartered accountant in 1936, and is currently Vice-President of the Scottish Institute. He was admitted to The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants in 1939, became a Fellow in 1945, and was elected its President for the year 1956-57: he was then 44 years of age, and the youngest member ever to hold that office. In 1961 he was awarded the Institute's Gold Medal. He remains a member of the ICWA Council, and has served on a number of its committees, including Executive, Public Relations, Joint Diploma, Jubilee and Kindred Societies.

In 1942 he entered the partnership of Robson Morrow & Co, from which he resigned in 1951 to join the board of the Brush Electrical Engineering Co Ltd, where over the next seven years he was successively financial director, deputy managing director and managing director. In 1950, he led the management accounting team which visited the United States under the aegis of the Anglo-American Council on Productivity, and from 1965 to 1968 was a member of the Export Council for Europe.

He is a founder-member of the British Institute of Management, a member of the Institute of Taxation, a Freeman of the City of London and an honorary Companion of the Institution of Electrical Engineers.

Like many chartered accountants, Mr Morrow includes golf amongst his hobbies, and he is a member of the Royal and Ancient at St Andrews. His other recreations, when time permits, are reading, music, gardening and ski-ing.

For the past eleven years, he has been a much-valued member of the panel of judges for The Accountant Annual Awards, and we greatly regret that other calls upon his time have now made it necessary for him to withdraw.

£6,691 free of interest and the trustees were free to overdraw their account up to that sum. The bank stipulated that the trust income should be applied to reduce this overdraft. As the overdraft fell, so Mr Wachtel was able to withdraw an equivalent amount of his deposit. He was assessed to tax on the footing that the trust income applied in repaying the overdraft was 'payable to or applicable for the benefit of the settlor' within the meaning of section 405 of the Income Tax Act 1952.

The Revenue contended that the deed of settlement, together with the provision of the cash deposit and the agreement with the bank, constituted an 'arrangement' and was therefore a settlement of which Mr Wachtel, who had provided the funds directly or indirectly, was the settlor within section 411 (2). The Special Commissioners allowed Mr Wachtel's appeal, and the Revenue appealed to the High Court.

Mr Justice Goff, allowing the Revenue's appeal

(The Times, July 22nd) said that he had no doubt that the settlement together with the arrangements with the bank was a settlement within the wide definition of section 411 (2). He was also satisfied that the Commissioners were right in holding that Mr Wachtel was settlor of the whole fund: the trustees could only borrow because he had deposited funds. The question was whether, by virtue of section 405 (2), the settlor had an interest in the income.

Apart from authority, it seemed that the payments were for the settlor's benefit since they enabled him to withdraw part of his frozen capital. His lordship derived assistance from Jenkins v. CIR (23 ATC 198), where it was conceded that money paid to the settlor to discharge an interest-free loan was a payment for his benefit. The release of an interest-free deposit was in pari materia. There was nothing in the dicta in Vestey v. CIR (28 ATC 89) and Potts Executors v. CIR (29 ATC 388) to disturb his lordship's view.

THIS IS MY LIFE

Cutting Manpower

by An Industrious Accountant

RECRIMINATIONS were futile, said the managing director; resolutions to do better were merely words – prompt action alone was the answer. He proposed to appoint a series of subcommittees of the board to review every last debit in the profit and loss account and to come up with recommendations for betterment. He didn't exactly say 'or else . . .' but somehow the words hung ominously in the air.

Two afternoons later I stood in the boardroom, explaining the function of the accounts department by reference to a detailed organization chart. Finance and costs, and credit control, punched-cards, and payroll, and registration, and secretarial, and pensions – all were analysed in terms of manpower. I was amazed to see how much was done so well by so few.

My audience seemed much less amazed. The MD himself was chairing the meeting, and his fellow members included no accountants. They interjected queries like 'You feel you need four for that?' and 'What would happen if you didn't record these details?' They nodded curtly and made brief notes on their pads. They reminded me of the tribunal that shot the deserters from Caporetto in Hemingway's Farewell to Arms . . . 'the questioners had all the efficiency, coldness, and command of themselves of Italians who are firing and are not being fired on'.

The MD asked if the punched-card supervisor was really necessary? After all, the job was routine and repetitive, and didn't need decision-making or planning; it was a purely information function, surely? The girls were efficient and responsible and should be able to handle the work unsupervised. The deputy-c. said we could call in that representative chap if we needed modifications or specialist advice, so when Ilkley said eagerly that he could do with a bloke who knew the numbers, the decision was promptly taken.

Just to remind them that we weren't dealing with puppets I said I'd discuss it with the supervisor, who I was sure would be glad to help Ilkley. The MD glanced up ominously at the implication, so I shut up without further ado.

Prinny questioned the need for the girl on the Xerox duplicating machine. Why should she sit there all day while the machine did the work and the staff stood by like dummies waiting for their copies? Let them push the button themselves in future, he recommended. The other dopes concurred, implementation to be immediate (there's been a shambles there since!) and we marked a further reduction off my manpower.

They wasted some time discussing remote control audio-typing pools and the hiving-off of the registrar's section to the auditors, and then time ran out.

Follow-up meeting some time next Monday to progress the other sections of Accounts, said the MD briskly; target to be a minimum 10 per cent reduction by Christmas, the secretary to submit appropriate redeployments for consideration.

He makes it sound so easy.

I—New Opportunities for Using Computers

by HAROLD LUCAS, B.Sc.(Econ.), B.Com., A.C.I.S., A.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

UNTIL very recently the average accountant has had little opportunity of using a computer to assist him in calculations associated with his work. By calculations are implied processes such as calculating the yield in a discounted cash flow appraisal of investment, as distinct from routine data processing, such as the up-dating of files, which is commonplace in business.

It has not been practical, in most business situations, for the accountant to have access to computer facilities; not, at least, with anything like the immediacy that the calculations might require. This has stemmed from a number of reasons, among which may be listed:

- (a) Access to computer facilities has generally implied that the work would be passed to the computer room to be processed by the computer staff. There has been a human link between the accountant and the computer.
- (b) Audit security has required restricted access to the computer installation and programs.
- (c) Work scheduling—especially with the typical batch system of processing magnetic tape data—has been done in a way that made the short, sharp type of calculation a nuisance.
- (d) Some program packages have been available for standard calculations, but these have tended to relate to the fields of statistics and operational research, rather than to business calculations.
- (e) Programming has been beyond the scope of the accountant and manager who has not been specifically trained for computer applications. The emphasis, in business, has been on what are known as assembler languages, relatively difficult to learn and related to a particular range of computers, or on COBOL, a general commercial language, and this has not been conducive to the use of computers in business for the type of calculation where mathematical manipulations are of more importance than the volume of the data.

This situation is rapidly being changed by the development of computer terminals. These afford access to a computer installation so that instructions and data may be input and results may be received by several individuals at different locations. Many such terminals may be linked with a computer, either with an in-house computer owned, rented or leased by the business in question, or with one run by an outside organization or bureau which sells computer time.

Such terminals generally take the form of a teleprinter connected to the computer. This connection may be simply done over an ordinary telephone line by using a device called a modem.

The practical effect of such a terminal is that the operator can, within limits, use the computer, and part of its backing store, almost as if he were in the computer room in full control (or hands-on, as it is sometimes called).

Time slices

Such control is achieved by a deception which will rarely inconvenience the user. By various means the computer facilities are switched from one use to another. This may be simply done by having time slices of short duration, which rotate among the various terminals that happen to be in use, picking up each time from where the calculation had previously reached, but giving an effect of continuity to the operator. This is practical because of the very high speed at which central processing units (cpu) operate compared with the speeds of the input and output devices. It has the advantage from a cost point of view that it tends to give higher utilization of the most costly equipment of a computer configuration. If time is being hired the high-power computer will be charged for only when it is being used, though there will also be connection and other charges.

An essential ingredient of the newer systems is the use of disc storage, with its advantages of random access and its huge potential capacity. Programs and data can be picked up from the various parts as required. This is quite different from the serial form of access implied by tape systems—though tapes are still required as cheap dumps for large masses of data not currently being used.

Developments such as this imply that accountants can no longer afford to be passive observers when computers are used for calculations. It is the aim of these articles to outline some of the fundamentals of calculating on a computer, using examples drawn from business.

Interactive methods

Nowadays the first demonstration given to the newcomer to computing is often in the form of a game which he can play with the computer. A specimen is reproduced at Fig. 1 (by courtesy of Database Ltd).

Fig. 1 An Interactive Print-out
Game of noughts and crosses played on computer.

It represents a game of noughts and crosses in which the computer responds to the moves made by a human player. Two games are shown. When your move appears on the print-out the player types one of the nine numbers designating the possible positions in which he may place a cross. If this position is already filled the computer indicates this by signalling square already filled - try again. The number after my move is automatically typed by the computer. At each stage of the game the computer prints the up-to-date position in the shape of a small matrix.

Such a demonstration is impressive to the newcomer to computing and has the advantage that, in a simple way, he is immediately in charge of the computer. It will be seen that his instructions must follow a code to which the computer responds. He must not be misled by the apparently human attributes of comments such as hard luck and well played; these have been programmed into the computer and will always print-out when the computer has won or drawn, respectively.

The apparent ease of control can be misleading. The computer is following a pre-set pattern of responses to all possible situations that may arise within the limits of the game. Considerable time and skill has gone into this programming. It represents a package of instructions that has already been fed into the computer. For some practical calculations such packages are available from computer manufacturers, or from software specialists, or from computer users' pools. Often the user will wish to write his own simple programs to cope with his own specific problems, and some of the more popular techniques for achieving this will be introduced later.

The 'conversation' which is held with the computer in a game such as noughts and crosses is a simple example of what may be developed to a very sophisticated level. Business games, used increasingly for management training, are often based on such interactive computer techniques. As an immediate practical aid to the manager, such techniques are being developed in the form of 'models' of the situation with which he is dealing. The response of the model to proposed changes can be tested by feeding these changes through the terminal and observing what is output. For this purpose output in the form of 'displays' on a cathode ray tube enables a set of information to be shown immediately in visual form.

We shall return to some of these points later. For the moment let us consider a practical example of finger-tip operation.

Fig. 2 Input for DCF Program

The first line of the input has four numbers, separated by commas. The first, £20,000, is the amount of the proposed investment. The second, 10, tells the computer how many years are involved as returns from the investment; the program provides for up to 50 such periods. The third number, 1, is simply a control digit for the output. When set at this value it gives the basic information shown in Fig. 3. Set at any other number it provides a full print-out of the DCF discount table, really only required for checking or training purposes.

AV YEARLY PER CENT	=	4.85
PAYBACK PERIOD	=	6.62
&RUN

Fig. 3 Output from DCF Program

The final number on the first line, 1,000, controls the accuracy of the calculation. Set thus it implies that the calculated yield will give a total discounted flow accurate within one-thousandth of the input figure of £20,000, if this can be achieved. The next ten lines give the yearly expected net returns from the investment, e.g., in the first year we expect £4,000, in the second £2,000, etc. The &RUN is simply an instruction required by the particular computer.

Fig. 3 shows the output relating to the above data.

The first line gives the most important fact – that the DCF yield is 8.03 per cent. Readers will recognize that this is the rate of interest which, applied as a compound interest discount rate to future years' flows of income, equates the total of these with the sum invested. This is a very laborious calculation by manual methods and depends on approximation techniques. The computer produces the result almost instantaneously.

The second line gives a check on the actual total of the discounted values of the returns. In this case it is just over £20,015, so there is an error of £15 in £20,000, which is a relative error of less than 0.1 per cent or 1 per 1,000. This is related to the input value of 1,000, indicating that an error of this order is satisfactory. The intention of building this into the program was to reduce waste involved by the extra time taken to achieve a higher degree of accuracy than needed.

The next three lines of the output give traditional values still used in connection with investment appraisal. The average yearly return of £970 is the difference between the undiscounted sum of the returns over the life of the asset and the capital investment, divided by the number of years. The next line expresses this return as a percentage of the capital value ($970 \times 100 \div 20,000 = 4.85$ per cent). The final line shows that, if we are interested in the pay-back period, this is between six and seven years.

The last three calculations are easy to program. The calculation of the yield presents more difficulties. In this example it has been done by assuming a rate of interest and applying this to the data. The resulting present value of the income stream is then compared with the capital investment. Differences greater than the permitted degree of accuracy cause the rate to be increased or decreased in steps of 1 per cent, then of 0.1 per cent, etc., until the calculation homes on the target value.

This is an example of an iterative technique where we go through the same calculations again and again, with some modification, until a result is achieved. The speed of computer calculation makes this a feasible approach. In cases such as this the program is written to generate its own discount tables for any rates of interest that may be involved, in the same way as tax tables may be generated for processing payrolls.

A user-controlled program

In the example just given it will be seen that the computer user has two decisions to make:

- whether or not a full print-out of the DCF calculation is required, exercised by the choice of third number on the first line of the data; and
- what degree of accuracy is called for, exercised by the choice of the fourth number.

Another characteristic is that without instructions as to precisely how the data is to be input it would be impossible to operate the program. Such programs tend to be efficient with regard to computer time used, always assuming that the user has absorbed the instructions accurately.

Sales forecasting for the data illustrated in Fig. 4 is handled by the program which results in the print-out of Fig. 5, and which uses a different approach. It prints through the control keyboard instructions as to what the user must do at each stage and tells him how to exercise any options. Once such a program has been input no instruction-book information is strictly needed, but it saves time if the user has beforehand a good knowledge of the program's capabilities and has seen specimen prints.

Fig. 5 Use of Line-fitting Program to Estimate Trends and Forecast Future Sales

This particular program was devised by the writer to cope with a very familiar problem in business statistics; that of fitting a 'least-squares' line to points which lie approximately on a straight line. The reader is probably familiar with the approach; if not he may take it that the technique gives the best-fitting line and can be laborious to apply, with a considerable possibility of human error.

The first line below the heading (Fig. 5) enables the user to select one of two versions of input of the data. In this case he has typed 1, which results in the next line of instructions, appropriate where the X values are equally spaced, as is often the case with dates arising in commercial work. He types in the first year (1960), the distance between the dates (1 year) and the number of years involved (10). The instruction is then to type Y values, which the user has done on the same line, omitting '000s. This has input the data on which the graph of Fig. 4 is based.

The next line of instructions enables the user to change the origin (see below). In the upper part of the diagram this has not been done since he has typed 0.

The computer prints the equation of the line, from which it can be seen that the yearly rate of increase of sales is about £104,000. The user can type any year for which he requires the forecast of sales and the computer immediately supplies this. Typing 9999 ends this part of the program.

We then have the option of calculating the equation of X in terms of Y (which is of no value in this case), or of calculating the coefficient of correlation, which measures how closely related are the Y and X values (unity indicating a perfect correspondence), or of ending the program. The user has opted for the coefficient of correlation, after which the program is automatically ended.

The lower part of Fig. 5 shows what happens when the other option is exercised at the starred line. This converts 1960 into zero for the X values, so that 1970 becomes year 10, 1980 becomes year 20, etc.

In Fig. 6 we have data relating to total costs of producing different volumes of output. There are five volumes for which the total costs are known, represented by the points on the graph. These points have been fed into the computer (Fig. 7), using the option where the X values do not move in equal steps. The fourth line, typed by the user, gives the number of points (5), followed by the X and Y values (co-ordinates) of each of these points. Thus, for output of 540 units the total cost was £986,000, for output of 600 units it was £1,060,000, etc., the last three noughts being omitted to save time.

The equation can be interpreted as showing a fixed cost of £718,000 and a variable cost per unit of £0.54 × 1,000 = £540. The estimated cost of any volume of output is immediately available; thus the cost of producing 1,100 units should be £1,313,000.

Fig. 7 Use of Line-fitting Program to Estimate Fixed and Variable Costs

The coefficient of correlation has again been calculated and the program terminated.

Both the DCF and the line-fitting programs were run on an Elliott 4100 series computer. The former was programmed in FORTRAN and the latter in ALGOL. Programming will be the main topic of the next article.

Small computers and pseudo-terminals

The use of terminals generally implies that a relatively powerful computer, with commensurate storage, is linked with a number of teleprinters, or other forms of terminal, to give multi-access facilities. This is a practical proposition, since terminals are relatively cheap and they make for the fuller usage of expensive central processors, the capabilities of which tend to be related to their size.

Small computers, some of desk-top proportions, have appeared and offer an alternative to terminals, since their cost may be only in the region of a few thousand pounds. These may be capable of dealing with calculations where limited programming and data facilities are not an obstacle. There is a tendency to develop small computers which themselves can cope with limited calculations, having a small storage, and which can be used as terminals for larger computers.

In connection with calculations of the simplest kind it may be noted that modern electronic calculators, costing perhaps less than £1,000, may have register facilities and perhaps additional programming equipment which make them rivals to terminals. It is difficult to say where calculating machines leave off and computers begin. Small computers and powerful calculators are sometimes referred to as pseudo-terminals.

Compensation for Loss of Office

2—Tax Assessment on the Recipient

by LAWRENCE OSBORNE, A.T.I.I.

AS long as he remains under contract of service or a member of the board, all moneys passing from the company to a director will be treated as emoluments of office and, subject to any claim under Rule 7, will be assessed to tax under Schedule E.

Payments received after the contract of service is terminated or the seat on the board has been vacated will be liable to assessment if they can be related back to the said contract or directorship (as additional remuneration, bonus, etc.) or if they take the form of a pension or retirement annuity. By contrast, sums paid as compensation for loss of office may, in certain circumstances, escape liability to income tax and surtax altogether.

The position of the recipient of compensation is governed by sections 37 and 38 Finance Act 1960 which provide that:

(Section 37) (1) 'Income tax shall be charged under Schedule E in respect of any payment made to the holder or past holder of any office or employment or to his executor or administrator, whether made by the person under whom he holds or held office or by any other person.' (2) '... which is made, whether in pursuance of any legal obligation or not ... in connection with the termination of the holding of the office or employment or any charge in its functions or emoluments, including any payment in commutation of annual or periodical payments ...' but (section 38) (3) 'tax shall not be charged by virtue of the last foregoing section in respect of payment of an amount not exceeding £5,000 and in the case of a payment which exceeds that amount shall be charged only in respect of the excess.'

The combined effect of these two sections is to limit to the sum of £5,000 the previously unrestricted benefit of tax-free compensation.

Compensation or emolument

It must be stressed, however, that even this reduced benefit will be obtained only if it can be shown that the payment constitutes at law compensation for loss of, and not emoluments of, an office. This contention may not be easy to establish. Experience shows that the Inland Revenue often seek to relate back the payment to the appointment previously held and will go to great lengths to establish the claim that a payment constitutes a taxable emolument of office.

The name which a remittance may be given in the service or severance agreement or in the minutes is not necessarily conclusive evidence. 'The parties cannot conclude the matter in favour of the taxpayer by using the phrase "compensation for loss of office"', (Mr Justice Roxburgh in Dale v. De Soissons (1950) 29 ATC 55 at page 58). The nature of the payment must be decided on the basis of fact and circumstances alone.

'As the many cases on this topic show, it is often very difficult to determine the character of a payment made to the holder of an office, when his tenure of office is determined, or the terms on which he holds it are altered; and the question in each case is whether on the facts of the case the lump sum paid is in the nature of remuneration or profits in respect of the office or is in the nature of a sum paid in consideration of the surrender by the recipient of his rights in respect of the office' (per Lord Justice Jenkins in Henley v. Murray (1950) (29 ATC at page 42).

Practitioners are often required to give advice as to the manner in which compensation should be paid in order not to attract liability to tax at the hands of the recipients, or to conduct negotiations on this subject with the Inland Revenue. In this connection reference to the following cases may provide some useful guidance on the matter.

The leading case on the subject is Henley v. Murray (1950) (29 ATC 35). The facts of the case are as follows:

The appellant, Mr Henley, held the office of managing director of a company under a service agreement which provided that he should continue in office until March 31st, 1944. The appellant resigned his appointment at the request of the board on July 6th, 1943, and claimed arrears of director's fees and compensation for loss of office. The latter claim was first contested by the company but was later settled by a payment to the appellant of the sum which he would have received if he had continued in office until March 31st, 1944, namely £2,202 14s 4d. The appellant contended that the payment represented compensation for loss of office but the General Commissioners decided that it was assessable as remuneration.

The Court of Appeal held (reversing the judgment of Mr Justice Croom-Johnson) that the payment was made as consideration for giving up the right to continue in employment and receive the remuneration and that it was not assessable to income tax.

The Master of the Rolls (Sir Raymond Evershed) rejected the contention that 'the sum awarded as damages arises from the contract, in the sense that if there has never been a contract, the sum of damages could never have been awarded' and he continued:

'I think in the circumstances of this case as I have stated them, it is not also open to the Crown to say that the sum of £2,000-odd constitutes profits from the office or employment, since I think that upon its true analysis it constitutes the consideration payable to Mr Henley for the total abrogation imposed upon him of his contract of employment so that from July 6th, 1943, no contract existed under which that figure or any other sum could be paid.'

The Court of Appeal decided in favour of the taxpayer.

This decision is of particular interest because the compensation paid to Mr Henley was not – strictly speaking – a 'lump sum' but represented the exact amount of remuneration lost by him because of dismissal. In consequence, the Crown's contention that the payment 'stood in place of' and was directly related to the contract of employment previously held, was not unfounded.

When the employment ceases

The case of Clayton v. Lavender (1965) (44 ATC 477) concerned the appellant (Mr Clayton) who in 1965 became employed as a resident consultant of a company and about a year later informed the managing director that he did not wish to continue after the first year. The engagement was terminated in accordance with the terms of a letter from the managing director, which read as follows: 'We will pay you £4,000 per year for one year as from August 14th and £2,000 for the next year, that is to say up to and until August 14th, 1969.'

The payments under the above agreement were accordingly made monthly under deduction of PAYE, but subsequently the taxpayer appealed against the assessment and contended that the moneys were paid to him in consideration of surrender of his rights under the contract of employment and that the employment had in fact terminated on August 14th, 1957. The Revenue contended that the employment was not terminated until 1959 and alternatively that the taxpayer was under obligation, if called upon, to act in an advisory capacity for the period covered by the payments. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the Inland Revenue. On appeal, Mr Justice Stamp held that the employment terminated in August 1957, that there was no agreement between the parties concerning future services and that in consequence the sums received by Mr Clayton were not taxable.

In this connection, Mr Justice Stamp said:

'In my judgment the subsequent payments were not remuneration or profits in respect of this office or employment but were sums paid in consideration of the surrender of his rights . . . Had the company neglected to make the payments the taxpayer's remedy would surely have been an action at law for breach of contract made on August 14th, 1957, and not an action for remuneration agreed to be paid by a contract of service made in August of the previous year.'

The second criterion used by Mr Justice Stamp was that of obligation to perform duties or services after receipt of and in consideration of payment of compensation:

'I am unable to accept the view that, where a man cannot be required to perform the duties of his office or employment and has no right to perform them, he can be said to hold an office or employment. In such a case it seems to me that the essential elements of a contract of employment are absent and that any contract which thereafter regulates their relations cannot be a contract of employment. And if payment is agreed to be made to an employee in consideration of his agreeing that he shall not in future perform any obligations to his employer and that the employer should not be entitled to require his services, the payment is a payment in consideration of the surrender by the recipient of his rights in respect of the office.'

The rationes decidendi of this important case may well have provided a new basis of the law relating to compensation for loss of office and appear to repudiate the principles previously laid down by Mr Justice Macnaghten in Hofman v. Wadman (1946) (25 ATC 457).

In Buckley v. Ayerst (1968) (47 ATC 67) Mr Justice Goff refers to and fully endorses the principles laid down in the Clayton case.

The last-mentioned is the most recent case concerning the recipient of compensation for loss of office. It concerns a sales director who retired from the board on February 28th, 1965, but was to continue in a consultative capacity until December 31st. During this period he rendered no services to the company but was paid the full salary under his service agreement. The appellant contended that his office terminated on February 28th, and that the sums received thereafter represented consideration for the termination of his contract of employment. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue. Mr Justice Goff held that if the employment terminated on February 28th, the sums received thereafter could not constitute remuneration and would need to be treated as compensation for loss of office. He referred the case to the General Commissioners to decide, on the point of fact, when the employment had ceased. •

Emoluments in arrears

It should not be assumed, because of the favourable Court decisions quoted above, that all payments of compensation effected after the termination of employment will escape liability to income tax. A brief reference to case law will show ample evidence to the contrary.

In Dracup v. Radcliffe (1946) (25 ATC 455), payments made after cessation of employment were held by the Court to constitute arrears of salary and commission taxable as remuneration.

Payments made to directors and employees at or after cessation of employment, in pursuance of provisions contained in service agreements entered into before the employment had terminated were held by the Courts to be taxable emoluments (even though they were expressed to be in lieu of notice) in the cases of Henry v. Foster (1931) (10 ATC 222), Hofman v. Wadman (supra) and Dale v. De Soissons (supra).

Anyone negotiating with the Inland Revenue on this subject will be well advised to acquaint himself with the facts of the above-mentioned cases, as they are likely to form the basis of the contentions put forward by the Inspectors. The judgment in Dale v. De Soissons is of particular interest because of the discussion by Mr Justice Roxburgh of the principles laid down in earlier cases on this subject.

The last-mentioned case concerned payment upon dismissal to an assistant managing director who had been employed under a service agreement which enabled the company to terminate the appointment at certain specified dates, upon payment of the sum of £10,000 described in the agreement as compensation for loss of office. The employers exercised their right of termination, and 'compensation' was duly paid. It was contended on behalf of the taxpayer that the payment was made as compensation for loss of office, not as remuneration, and on appeal the Special Commissioners upheld this view and discharged the assessment. In the High Court Mr Justice Roxburgh related the payment to the service agreement under which it was received and ruled that it should be assessed as emoluments of office. Distinguishing the case from the then recent Court of Appeal decision in Henley v. Murray the judge said:

'In the present case the Colonel [De Soissons] surrendered no rights. He got exactly what he was entitled to get under his contract of employment. Accordingly the payment falls within the taxable class and the decision of the Special Commissioners must be reversed.'

From the analysis of the above decisions and dicta the following conclusions may be drawn:

- (1) Payments upon termination of employment made in pursuance of a contract of service or agreement entered into prior to cessation of employment will be taxed as emoluments. The liability will also arise if the agreement envisages some future duties or obligations incumbent upon the recipient after receipt of the final payment.
- (2) Payments in consideration of the surrender of rights of contract or appointment, as well as compensation for loss of such rights, will normally escape liability.
- (3) Contrary to widespread belief, the actual timing of the remittance is not important. On the other hand the terms of agreement or resolution of the board under which the remittance is to be made are of utmost relevance, and should be considered in detail by professional advisers before being made final.

Experience shows that the Inland Revenue will spare no effort to prove that lump-sum payments are of a taxable nature. In view of the diminution of the benefit involved, due to provisions of sections 37 and 38 of the Finance Act 1960 the cost of appeal to the High Court may not be justified and the outcome may need to be decided by negotiations between the professional advisers of the taxpayer and the Inspector of Taxes. If satisfactory agreement cannot be reached, it may be considered advisable to refer the matter for the opinion of 'head office' prior to taking the case to appeal before the Commissioners. Reviews by ROBERT TOWNSEND.

Michael Joseph, 30s.

This book is sub-titled How to Stop the Corporation from Stifling People and Strangling Profits. The author, a former chairman of the Avis Rent-a-Car Corporation, likes to think in terms of people rather than corporations, and his book is a naked incitement to 'everyone who is or might be trapped in the sludge of organization' to start dismantling those parts of the organization which are not actually serving people.

The book is written in the form of a glossary, and incorporates a generous leaven of anecdotes and personal history. It is iconoclastic and in places extremely funny, and can be guaranteed to give all but the most hide-bound executive some food for thought. Thus, computers are defined as 'big, expensive, fast, dumb adding-machine typewriters' and the majority of computer technicians as 'complicators, not simplifiers'. The function of accountants (or, to use the author's phraseology, 'controllers') is to provide 'an honest notation system by which managers can take responsible action towards their chosen goals and measure their progress. If the accountant's reports aren't useful to the line managers, they shouldn't be prepared'. How true!

The publishers claim that the book is not about how to preside with dignity over the mess you have inherited from your predecessors. It is about how to think unthinkable thoughts with a view to making an unusual success out of a usual situation, or making a minor success out of an impossible situation. As Mr Townsend is drawing heavily upon his personal experiences, they may very well be right.

Motivation and Management Development

by ROBERT E. TANNEHILL.

Butterworth, £2 10s.

The term management development is in constant use today. The UK Industrial Training Boards are deeply concerned with it, and the sources of management education are offering courses upon it. This book is therefore very topical.

The author takes the concept beyond the narrow and mechanistic approach commonly accepted today, into a philosophy where the organic development of the manager is not only a desirable activity of management but is, in fact, management itself. Management, as seen by the author, must be based on learning and development, not moulded through coercion and fear.

The failure of industry to undertake the training and development of its managerial staff is seen in modern tragedy of 'too old at 45'. The attitudes that produce this absurdity can only be dissipated by action on the lines laid down in the book.

Throughout the book the author concentrates on the motivational aspects of management development. These aspects divide into two classes, one being largely environmental – to keep the executive happy; the other relates to growth and maturity. It is in this second class – in the field of job satisfaction, of achievement and self-activation – that real management development occurs. The teaching of management techniques and the widening of the manager's knowledge are said to have little effect upon the developing maturity of the manager and the author's propositions constitute a warning against the present-day mechanistic approach to training and education.

It is the building up of the manager's experience, the increase in self-confidence by the acceptance of responsibility, the right to make mistakes, the undertaking of projects which will extend his capacity, the better understanding of his relationships with others, that bring the development of managerial ability.

As the author points out, such development cannot be instituted for an executive or controlled without the closest co-operation of his senior. From this it follows that each manager not only has a responsibility for his own development but an even greater one for the development of the staff answering to him. Such a network of training relationship is not only dependent upon a suitable motivational climate instituted by top management but will in turn produce a climate very suitable for management development.

Management development is everyone's problem today – this book should provide much needed guidance.

Information for Decision Making: Quantitative and Behavioural Dimensions

edited by ALFRED RAPPAPORT.

Prentice-Hall, 80s.

It is pleasing to see a book of such unusual quality. By making a careful selection of articles relevant to the subject of the informational aspect of management systems the material has been presented with clarity of exposition. Furthermore, in the selection of the articles often expressing opposite or complementary views and supplemented by editorial comment at the end of each chapter, the editor has succeeded in enriching the knowledge content of the book and helping the learning process.

The book opens with the subject of decision making and its application in the field of accounting. The problems of timing, choice, frequency and amount of information are discussed in turn. The second part of the book is concerned with information required for planning and control. This ranges over a challenging article on long-range planning, an article on research programmes, controls in financial planning, evaluation of capital investments, and the application of financial control in a decentralized organization. The last section of the book deals with the behavioural aspects of information.

The importance of an accounting system in motivation is fully dealt with, especially from the organizational aspect. The contributor suggests that decentralization is necessary for motivation and that the process of decentralization is not possible without the control supplied by accounting information. The effect of budgeting on morale is favourably and unfavourably examined.

The chapter entitled 'Behavioural assumptions of management accounting' presents a clear picture of management attitudes which lie behind the traditional pattern of such accounting, and the contributor on this subject suggests that these attitudes are based largely on concepts of management outmoded in assumptions about the patterns of human behaviour. The management accounting function is essentially a behavioural function', he says, and suggests that accountants should make themselves aware of the new concepts concerning the relationships between men and organizations.

The book closes with an interesting dissertation on the failure of management to understand information presented to them and the difficulty of obtaining action in certain conditions.

How the Economy Works and other Essays

by F. W. PAISH.

Macmillan, £4 10s.

This book comprises eight long papers written between 1964 and 1969 dealing with various aspects of the British economy. Two public lectures are now available to wider audiences: the first covers former government policy towards business investment and the second discusses inflation and the balance of payments. Also included is a long paper on short- and long-term interest rates originally published by the Manchester University Press. Where necessary the papers have been supplemented by post-scripts to bring them up to date.

This is a useful volume for library use, but the price seems rather high for students or even the average reader interested in Professor Paish's views on monetary economics.

Corporate Growth Strategies

edited by ISAY STEMP.

American Management Association, $12, Bailey Bros & Swinfen, £6.

This book represents a valuable contribution to management literature. Bedevilled as we are – certainly in Britain – by continual cries for more and more growth, we have in this single volume an excellent survey of the problems of growth and the strategies – both corporate and for specific disciplines – which will promote growth. Each aspect is dealt with by a different author and the editor is to be congratulated on avoiding the overlapping and discursiveness which so often occurs in this type of book. Nor are the contributors academics, who so often treat a subject such as this in a rather abstract manner, but practical businessmen (one of them British) who are very close to the problems with which they are dealing.

The first four chapters examine the objectives of growth, the conditions under which it can be achieved, and how to plan and organize for it. Then come specialized aspects of corporate growth, including the human factors involved, the development of methods for adequately remunerating and motivating the management team, marketing, technological change, the financial strategy (including assessing returns for the owners), international financing, and mergers and acquisitions.

Written mainly for the top management team, the book emphasizes most strongly that an understanding of the growth potential and objectives of a business is much more than rather platitudinous statements of corporate policy. It requires the formulation and activation of a dynamic policy, geared to carefully thought out objectives by business leaders who will more and more tend to be generalists rather than specialists. Here, in this key area of growth, we see expounded the basic elements on devising such a policy. This book should be read by all senior managers and those who are concerned with management problems.

Computer Languages: A Practical Guide to the Chief Programming Languages

by PETER C. SANDERSON.

Newnes-Butterworths, 55s.

The stated intention of this book is to introduce in one volume all the chief high-level machine-independent programming languages in a textual framework which would not require a high standard of mathematics. It must be said at the outset that the book fails in this purpose.

The reader who is not familiar with higher mathematics and the basic concepts of problem and system analysis and programming, will be left high and dry. For example, the first 25 pages are devoted to a very brief and unsophisticated view of digital computers, computer programming, and computer languages, most of which, however, will add nothing to the reader's knowledge of the topic. Yet six pages later one is faced with statements such as the following, with very little introduction:

'The operator $\uparrow$ denotes exponentiation. $n \uparrow m$ denotes n^m . An integer result is given only when n is type integer and m is type integer and positive or zero. Otherwise the result is real. No values of base or exponent which would give [sic] infinite, indeterminate or imaginary results are allowed. If the exponent is real the value of the base must never be negative'.

The languages that are covered by the book are ALGOL 60, FORTRAN, COBOL, PL/I, and Extended Mercury Autocode. People who are already involved in programming work, or who have a good mathematical background, will find this a most useful survey of the languages covered and the text is supported by a number of exercises with suggested solutions. Others should first seek a more elementary text before tackling this volume.

Capital Issues With Adjusted Stock Market Prices for Capital Gains Tax Purposes 1956-66 – 1969-70

Extel Statistical Services Ltd, £13 (including up-dating supplements).

There can be few practitioners dealing with capital gains tax who have not found this volume invaluable. The fact that it is produced in consultation with the Board of Inland Revenue and that it is used in the offices of the tax inspectorate is a sufficient guarantee of its accuracy and coverage.

This edition, the fifth in the series, provides a complete list of all quoted securities in Britain and Ireland, including unit trusts. The new edition now has a decimal currency column alongside that showing the 1965 base market value in £sd. As in previous years, this edition will be up-dated during the year by three cumulative supplements.

FOR STUDENTS

Source and Application of Funds

by R. E. ELLMER, M.A.(Cantab.), F.C.A., A.C.I.S.

INTERPRETATION of the balance sheet is a skill which the accountant has been developing for many years past, and with the injection of more and more detail into this vital document, interpretation has probably reached saturation point. But an evolutionary process has been taking place in the field of interpretation itself, and figures have been invoked to explain figures. And the figuring explanation has developed into the formalized shape of the source and application of funds statement, which has been produced to answer precisely and unemotionally the question, 'What has happened to the money?'

It is probable that early statements of source and application of funds were limited to the items which comprise working capital, but the statement of today embraces not only every item on the face of the balance sheet but reaches back into the profit and loss account where necessary to bring into the statement, for example, the funds received from the sale of old plant and machinery, reflected in the profit and loss account by reference to the loss incurred, and in the balance sheet by the overall movement of plant and machinery from year 1 to year 2.

Methods of treatment

Unfortunately, however, a certain amount of incredulity on the part of the client exists in relation to the treatment of a number of items in the statement of source and application of funds. Typical questions to which the client (and the student) seeks satisfactory answers are:

- (i) How can depreciation be a source?
- (ii) Why is an increase in debtors an application?
- (iii) Why is an increase in creditors a source?

Until these matters are explained, there may well be a certain amount of distrust in the mind of the client, and the accountant is faced with the embarrassment of having to interpret his own interpretation. It may therefore not be out of place to suggest how the answer to these typical questions could be framed.

With regard to depreciation, its place as a source may be explained by logic. The asset has been purchased, and there was therefore an outflow or application of funds, and now the benefit of using it is shown as a 'feed-back', inflow or source, the amount of the source being measured by the annual depreciation figure.

An argument based on financial considerations may also be employed. Suppose that no new fixed asset had been purchased from year 1 to year 2, i.e., the fixed assets at the end of year 2 are the same as those at the end of year 1. If depreciation is accounted for by means of a provision for depreciation account, there will, however, be an increase in the provision from year 1 to year 2, and the net fixed asset totals between the two years will show a decrease, which must be explained in the statement of source and application of funds. Just as the acquisition of the asset was reflected in the statement as an application of funds, so must its shrinkage in value by depreciation be reflected as a source of funds. Acquisition of new assets will, of course, tend to reverse the movement in the fixed assets figure in the statement, where the net figure of acquisition less disposal will be reflected as an application of funds.

With regard to the remaining points, an understanding of one will provide an appreciation of the other. The movement in debtors is probably best understood for the purpose of the statement of source and application of funds by considering a decrease in debtors from year 1 to year 2. The decrease has occurred because more cash was received from debtors in year 2 than in year 1 and, since there has been an increase in cash in that regard, the difference (reduction) in debtors from year 1 to year 2 must be shown as an inflow or source of funds. Conversely, an increase in debtors is reflected in the statement as an application of funds, and is analogous to the acquisition of an asset being reflected as an application of funds. A reduction in creditors means that more has been paid to them in year 2 than in year 1, and the reduction will be shown in the statement as an outflow or application of funds.

By the same token, an increase in creditors represents a source of funds.

To demonstrate a typical source and application problem, part of a question set by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales is used as an illustration. The relevant part of the question reads as follows:

You are introduced to a new client company by a friend who sends you the latest accounts for your consideration prior to introducing you to the managing director. The accounts include:

It will be noted that the statement of source and application of funds is prepared so that the cash flow is automatically shown as a balance.

The second section of the statement includes all items which are not part of the current assets and current liabilities as shown in the balance sheet, and the balance on this section produces the change in working capital. In this connection it should be observed that future taxation has been included in the second section because it shows in the reserves portion of the balance sheet, and is a source because it is analogous to an increase in creditors.

Finally, attention is particularly directed to the fact that the last item dealt with in the statement is the movement in cash. The sub-totals of source, £11,511, and application, £12,109, clearly show that the outflow of cash has exceeded the inflow of cash by £598. To inject the movement of cash into the statement of source and application of funds as a casual entry among other items is to rob the statement of the real purpose for which it is intended.

Finance and Commerce

Combined English Stores

SHAREHOLDERS in Combined English Stores Group Ltd probably wish that their company's results were as impressive as the way in which the figures are set out in the annual report. But the chairman has to open his annual statement with: 'It is with regret that I report the disappointing results of your company for the year ended January 31st, 1970, particularly as this is my first report as chairman.' However, this column proposes to leave aside for the moment the disappointing results, in favour of immediately concentrating on the report's style of presentation.

There is, and always will be, considerable debate on the order in which the various sections of a company's report should appear. The Combined English order is to open with a contents page setting out the sections as follows: notice of meeting, board of directors and officers, chairman's review, directors' report, consolidated profit and loss account, consolidated balance sheet, balance sheet, auditors' report, notes on the accounts, group structure.

At the start of each new section the company makes use of its symbol – a blue arrow head hotly pursued by a brown arrow head with short shaft attached. What this represents we do not pretend to know, but as a symbol this one looks well enough and gives a 'lift' to the appearance of the page.

Use is also made of good layout: a wide left-hand margin to the chairman's review allowing subsidiary headings. The directors' report is nothing exceptional, it is true, but it is well set out. It is in the accounts that the designers have enjoyed themselves with outlines and boxes.

Boxing the figures

The style is shown in the reprint, and in the original the comparative figures are in the now largely accepted blue. Comparative figures always used to be in red. 'Comparatives in red' was de rigueur for many many years, largely because some of those enlightened companies that first provided comparatives set them out in red. But now blue has taken over.

Whether the 'boxes' in the accounts make the accounts themselves any more readable is a debatable point. Indeed, one is tempted to look first at the boxes as if there ought to be something out of the ordinary in them, whereas in fact they contain the subsidiary figures and should not attract first attention. In that sense, therefore, the boxes distract attention from the major profit and loss and balance sheet items.

Wrong way?

This, surely, is the wrong way round. One example should suffice: under the profit and loss account the total of depreciation and of interest charges are the items that particularly matter, but the boxes concentrate attention on the items making up those totals. The box business is also being taken a little too far in the balance sheets in which the whole account is in a box divided into narrative and figure boxes, with the figure boxes containing two other boxes, one of which contains another box in the case of the current asset figures.

This column may be entirely wrong but it gets the impression that the accounts were presented in double-sided form with current liabilities and current assets shown separately and not deducted one from the other to lead to the necessary net funds employed figure largely because an account on that style could not be 'boxed'. Admittedly, that may be an entirely erroneous impression, but so intent is the 'boxing' that such an error may be pardonable.

Although some marks may be lost in the layout of the accounts, they are regained in the layout of the notes and of the detail of group structure. The structure by sectors is of 35 carpet shops, 31 household textile shops, 40 furniture stores, 43 men's wear shops, 19 fashion and separates shops and 19 men's and ladies' wear shops to make up the Specialist Shop Division.

There are 29 stores in the Departmental Stores Division, twelve other businesses ranging from travel agencies to the Canadian Fur Co, as well as a three-company-strong Import, Export, and Manufacturing Division.

Inadequate return

The departmental stores group, with turnover of £5,989,000 accounted for 44.9 per cent of sales but only 7.2 per cent of trading profit. The specialist shops division is split into two and 'special shops smaller groups' accounted for 13.8 per cent of sales with turnover of £1,836,000, and for 12.1 per cent of trading profit. The 'specialist shops major groups', however, whose turnover of £4,494,000 was 33.7 per cent of sales, accounted for 63.7 per cent of profits. The importing, exporting and manufacturing turnover at £1,007,000 was 7.6 per cent of sales and accounted for 17 per cent of profits.

Of the departmental stores group, the chairman says that a survey of group results over the past three years confirms that in the departmental and small store field there appears no longer to be a reasonable chance of obtaining an adequate return on the large amount of capital that has to be employed. There has therefore been a 'ruthless and determined pruning operation' to eliminate loss-making, and inadequate profit-earning, stores.

During the year the company took over the business of Smith & Brown (Brighton) Ltd on a share exchange basis involving the issue of 1,142,858 Combined English shares. Authorized capital has been raised to £2 million to make room for acquisitions in the specialist retail field currently being examined.

Courtaulds' Nutshell

ONE page in the Courtaulds' report puts the year's operations in a nutshell. On that page are three tables showing the source and use of funds, the analysis of profit and the classification of sales.

In the first table, profits retained, depreciation, proceeds of fixed asset sales, capital grants and increase in loan capital totalled £96.7 million, while expenditure on fixed assets, cost of acquisitions and change in working capital totalled £93.5 million, thus leaving £23.2 million as the increase in cash resources.

The analysis of profit and classification of sales tables are set side by side so that the results of the group's three divisions—fibres and textiles, paint, and packaging—can be seen in sales and profit terms. It is odd, though, that in the classification of sales each division is shown as a percentage contributor to the total as well as in money terms, while in the analysis of profit the reader is left to work out the percentages for himself.

The Courtaulds' report, incidentally, is entirely concerned with the year covered by the accounts: any prognostications about the future are held over for the annual meeting. Finally, as is the case with some other large companies, there is a lengthy report by the directors reviewing the year's operations but there is no 'chairman's statement' as such.

Wilson-Mandleberg

A NOTE to the profit and loss account of Wilson-Mandleberg Ltd, the rainwear, casual and sportswear manufacturers and distributors, refers to the accounts of a subsidiary, Heathermoor Clothing Ltd, where, after the end of the accounting year on December 31st, 1969, the directors were advised that stock at that date had been inaccurately taken. It was decided to take stock again at March 31st, 1970, and have accounts prepared and audited for the 15 months to that date. The profit for the year to December 31st included in the Wilson-Mandleberg account was a proportion of that shown by the Heathermoor accounts for the 15 months apportioned on the basis of turnover, and the stock figure at December 31st was 'computed accordingly'.

The auditors of Wilson-Mandleberg point out in their report that the Heathermoor accounts were not audited by them but that the basis used in computing Heathermoor's profit for the year and stock and work in progress at December 31st was 'reasonable' and therefore in their opinion the group accounts 'give a true view'.

In the previous year's Wilson-Mandleberg accounts, the auditors' report contained a qualification concerning the value shown in the parent balance sheet for the investment in subsidiaries. Mr Leslie Lavy, F.C.A., the chairman, states in his review with the latest accounts that the board 'considered that the value of the investments in subsidiary companies should be written down to the net asset values of those companies and consequently it has been necessary to charge the sum of £803,156 against reserves'.

Mr Lavy adds that whilst this has had no effect on the view shown by the consolidated balance sheet, 'the board felt that it would also be prudent to write off the cost of control of the subsidiaries amounting to £178,524'.

Fixed Price Pain

LONG-TERM contracts on a fixed price basis are, under conditions of cost inflation, an industrial pain in the profit neck. Losses of this kind were largely the cause of the trading loss shown by W. J. Simms Sons & Cooke Ltd, the Nottingham-based construction group. The loss of £258,933, against a previous year's profit of £609,684, was the first in the company's history.

Mr E. T. Sermon, the chairman, explains to shareholders that 'whilst every endeavour was made to estimate the effects of future increases, the imposition of SET, import taxes, the increasing cost of building materials, the disruption in labour conditions prior to wage increases, shortages of supplies of steel and other vital components have all exceeded our expectations and have collectively and progressively made these contracts unprofitable'.

While these conditions persist, long-term contracts of this kind are being avoided. This is part of a six-point plan designed to restore the company to profits. Turnover this year will be lower than last but there has been an appreciable increase in the volume of tendering during the current year. The forward order load at the time of the report was worth over £12 million, with further contracts being negotiated.

Car Registrations

CAFFYNS LTD, British Leyland distributors in Kent and Sussex, were able to avoid, in the year to last March, the worst experiences of many companies in the trade. Even so, turnover at £13.48 million against £12.66 million saw trading profit down by £110,105 to £489,571. The higher turnover was almost entirely due to new acquisitions. In the company's peak year of 1964-65, turnover of £10.93 million resulted in trading profits of £539,064 and the chairman, Mr S. M. Caffyn, makes the point that whereas in 1964 new UK car registrations were 1,215,929, the figure for 1969 was 987,441—a fall of 19 per cent.

In France, over the same period, registrations rose 29 per cent to 1,362,164; in Western Germany, 37 per cent to 1,841,048; in Italy, 47 per cent to 1,217,929, and in Japan by as much as 336 per cent to 1,523,941. The chairman comments that 'if the progress in this country had been the same as in other countries our financial results would have been very different indeed'.

New car registrations do not necessarily mean more cars on the road, but car owners may consider themselves lucky that the car population has not grown here at the pace that it has in Japan. Car owners, however, will be at one with the Caffyns chairman in bemoaning the fact that whereas in 1964 £830 million was absorbed in purchase tax on cars, petrol tax and road tax, the figure had increased to £1,843 million by 1969.

The comfort for Mr Caffyn is that the Motor Manufacturing EDC has forecast new registrations between the 1,750,000 and 1,950,000 marks by 1974.

CITY NOTES

FEATURELESS stock-markets at a time of industrial tension are not the paradox they are sometimes made out to be. There is no reason for stock-markets to be wildly bearish on a strike that will have to be settled sooner or later on some kind of inflationary basis.

The days of 'buy on a strike' may have gone, but there need be no rush to sell on one. Bargains marked for the Stock Exchange List have been below the 8,000 mark with a regularity which indicates that the market is merely ticking over and not in any kind of gear.

It is difficult to see prices going substantially and justifiably one way or the other under current conditions, and with Parliament in recess there will be no particular factors coming from that quarter. Anticipation of a series of 'measures' during the autumn - commonly called an 'Autumn Budget' - has been blunted.

These are markets in which the energetic search for special situations and recovery stocks, and in which the not-so-energetic are content to do little other than watch and wait. Under conditions of featureless markets day by day it is comparatively easy for investors to be convinced of the arguments for buying this or that special situation shares, and comparatively easy to waste good investment money in the process.

The current turnover situation, however, suggests that the less energetic are in the majority for the time being. Their position seems unlikely to be challenged.

CHANGES made in National Savings terms - the lifting of Savings Bank interest to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent and the introduction of a new fully competitive Savings Certificate issue - will put pressure on the building societies in due course. Prospects of a reduction in building society interest rates were hardly worth considering before the National Savings move and were entirely out of the reckoning after it.

Currently, the societies are pulling in investment money strongly and are lending relatively freely, but competition for funds is still keen. This point is, to a degree, behind the decision to change the name of the Co-operative Permanent Building Society to the Nationwide Building Society. The inclusion of Co-operative in the society's title was proving a brake on expansion and it was felt that the society's independence of the Co-operative movement should now be more generally recognized and appreciated.

THE Commercial Union's intervention in the Metropolitan Estates-Hill Samuel affair has inevitably roused considerably City comment. There seems currently to be a battle for merchant banking power, with merchant banks using other companies as ammunition.

Whether it is a Commercial Union or a Kleinwort bid for Metropolitan Estates is open to debate. In the same way is the question of who is going to be next on the lists with some other thinly disguised power bid.

IT is difficult to remember a time when more mergers and bids were in a state of peculiar limbo as now. Apart from the Commercial Union-Metropolitan Estates-Hill Samuel mix up, there is the ICI-Viyella International-Carrington & Dewhurst matter outstanding and also the case of the disgruntled shareholders in the Mecca company and the bid from Grand Metropolitan Hotels. There, the worth of an initially not particularly generous offer has been eroded by the fall in 'Grand Met' shares.

Refusal to offer anything higher may well win the day for 'Grand Met' if only out of the despair of Mecca shareholders who may be fearful of missing out and seeing their own shares falling back on the market. When a price is jacked up by a bid - albeit an unacceptable one - it is invariably tempting either to accept the bid or unload entirely.

Correspondence

The Future of the Accountancy Profession

SIR, — I would like to bring to the attention of your readers three points regarding the integration proposals which do not appear to have had the exposure that their importance merits.

Firstly, it is difficult to see the reasoning behind the claim made by the Council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants that integration is an essential pre-requisite to the raising of educational standards. It is said that we would not attract recruits to a second tier qualification if they could join one of the other bodies but this seems to presuppose that other bodies will not also raise their own educational standards which seems most unlikely as, if they do not, they will themselves become the second tier. If all the existing bodies raise their standards, I would have thought that a person who is not able to achieve these higher standards would be as likely to study for a second tier qualification of the Institute as he would do if integration comes about, as the choice would be between a second tier qualification or none at all.

Secondly, the main threat to the position of the Institute seems to be from the business schools rather than the other bodies and integration will not counter this. The competition from the business schools is being dealt with under the scheme by delegating, to a large degree, to the universities and business schools the future training of accountants. If this is a good thing, which is open to dispute, it seems equally feasible with or without integration.

Thirdly, it is claimed that, as far as the practising side of the profession is concerned, the Institute's traditional combination of examinations and practical training, in a professional office will remain a pre-requisite to the obtaining of a practising certificate. This will be achieved by requiring a person to spend thirty months in a professional office before he can obtain a practising certificate. However, a person who qualifies in the industrial stream or the public service stream will qualify by means of a different examination than his colleague in the practising stream. This surely implies that his education is not the best possible for a practising accountant. In particular, a person who qualifies by way of the public service stream will have only a very basic knowledge of taxation and investigations — two major facets of public practice — and yet after thirty months in a professional office, which may be spent entirely on two or three audits, he will be able to offer all accountancy services to the public without any restriction.

Yours faithfully,

Wembley, Middlesex.

R. W. MAAS, A.C.A.

SIR, — Perhaps those who are being drawn by the last ditch stand of Messrs Sutherland, Nicholson, Tanfield and company might like to reflect carefully on what their outlook really means. It means, I venture to suggest, 'Splendid isolation'!

We are, Mr Sutherland has pointed out on a number of occasions, a different animal from those with whom it is proposed we should merge. Agreed! But to what extent? The contention is that we are a practising profession, i.e., in public practice, while the others are not, and that we must at all costs safeguard this status. This is a fallacious argument — a vast army of our members work all or part of their life in industrial accounting.

It is to these that Mr Sutherland's arguments pose the first great threat; the threat of loss of their privileges as chartered accountants. I agree that he has not threatened their existence in exact terms but the purport of a speech he made at the President's Meeting of the London Chartered Accountant Students' Society in Guildhall in 1969 made it clear that should we continue in our separate ways he envisages a profession that is solely practising; no industrial members. Need I stress the results? A severely curtailed flow of industrial accountants into the profession would be the least of our worries, add to this the lack of research and facilities for gaining industrial financial know-how for our young members and I suggest our role as the leading financial advisers to industry will soon be taken over by the economist and mathematician.

Having stressed the main but by no means the only danger in isolationism, and here I would refer members to the position in which America once found herself, I would draw the practising members' notice to two major areas of benefit.

Firstly, to the smaller practitioner whose practice does not enable him to offer training facilities sufficiently attractive to attract the new higher grade of trainee accountant, as I believe he will be called. The new second tier registered student will provide the ideal type of student and the principal in turn will be dealing with precisely the class of work relevant to an affiliate accountant's qualification.

Secondly, to the medium-sized firm will accrue a very different benefit closely aligned to the demands of clients in the 1970s and 1980s, which is this: in the present world, where more and more emphasis is placed on management information, and where more and more managements come to hear of such a phenomenon, the smaller client, who has no management accountant and who cannot afford one, will look to his company's auditor/accountant to provide these services. This, today, he cannot do, both through lack of staff but more especially through lack of expertise.

Here then is a golden opportunity to remedy this situation and offer to the client these services, so providing a greater contribution to the community and at the same time increasing the scope and fee structure of the practice. To seize this opportunity only requires the recruitment of men with industrial management backgrounds, to be trained under the scheme as chartered accountants, who have the necessary know-how and who have the resources at their control of the research already done in this field by specialists. Since there will be now no hindrance to their becoming partners in a practising firm, recruitment of the requisite calibre of man to set up a management services team should not prove an insurmountable obstacle.

I would, in concluding, ask all members to think carefully about the dangers of isolation and realize that although we will not arrive at Utopia tomorrow, there are many, many benefits to be obtained by full participation in the scheme.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN H. SCOTT-BAIRD,

Birkenhead.

A.C.A., A.C.I.S.

SIR, - I have received the letter sent out by Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland, who are acting in the best interests of the profession. I would go further and suggest that all future intending entrants into the profession should consider seriously whether it is now worth while qualifying at all as a 'chartered accountant' since the dilution involved must, in time at any rate, tend to make the qualification, on its own, virtually valueless. The profession already suffers from unqualified accountants of different kinds.

It is true that it will be necessary to inquire into the validity of the qualifications of every Mark II chartered accountant and confusion will, in fact, be worse confounded; it is equally true that it is logical and inevitable that the practising side will be dominated by the far larger non-practising side to the extent of achieving an impossible and undesirable situation in the future.

For many years the position has been complicated by the Inland Revenue who are pleased to accept accounts and computations (not, of course, of companies) prepared by any Tom, Dick or Harry. The effect of integration in this context will again be to make a bad position worse to the extent of becoming untenable if it happens that the Inland Revenue increasingly assume functions properly undertaken by accountants.

What the sponsors of integration have done is to produce a scheme which at present is favourable, even unduly favourable, to the present Institute, and their intentions in this way are not too much open to question. What they have not done is to examine sufficiently, and even perhaps to comprehend, the indisputable fact that in time, by domination of the practising side by those not in practice and by the general dilution involved, the standards and status of the Institute - which means more to some of us than to others - will be diminished, diluted and denigrated. In the future the time-honoured qualification of chartered accountant may well become valueless without other qualifications obtained elsewhere to bolster it up. The business schools and others will win, the Institute will lose. The profession is not entirely composed of the larger firms.

Does any serious thinking member really believe the Institute deserves this fate? Vote against!

A better solution, at least for the next five or ten years, would be for the certified accountants, the cost and works accountants and the municipal treasurers to combine, with the present object of rationalizing and reclassifying the various kinds of accountants involved, and with the later object of combining with the existing chartered accountants on more favourable and better defined terms than at present. In any case it would be better for the present bodies to become subsidiaries of the English Institute so that rationalization may proceed more slowly and more methodically, without, at present at any rate, losing their separate entities. What is required is not scrambling but reclassification so that the public know clearly what kind of accountant they are dealing with. This will not be obtained by the present scheme.

Yours faithfully,

KENNETH WEST,

Addlestone, Surrey.

Statistical Sampling

SIR, - I wish to comment on the statement attributed to Mr F. Rigg at the Internal Auditors' Summer School reported in The Accountant of July 16th:

'Statistical sampling, however, was the application of mathematical probability theory to sampling. Being based on well established (and to the knowledgeable mathematician) provable rules of probability, the techniques that had been developed enabled an auditor to draw precisely defined conclusions as to the condition of all the items under review from a carefully calculated and selected sample.'

I submit that the above statement is factually incorrect. There is a clear distinction between mathematics on the one hand and statistics on the other hand. The fact that techniques of statistical sampling are accepted by statisticians does not mean that they are also accepted by mathematicians.

The mathematical attitude to probability has been best expressed by Julian Lowell Coolidge, formerly Professor of Mathematics in Harvard University, in the preface to his book An Introduction to Mathematical Probability written in 1924:

'From the purely mathematical point of view, the calculus of probabilities is somewhat unsatisfactory. To begin with we are forced to use approximate formulae, and it is not always easy to have an exact knowledge of their degree of exactness at least without arduous calculations. Then certain fundamental laws like the Gaussian Law of Error, are based on a variety of so-called proofs each making some very broad assumptions of doubtful validity. And lastly, there is a nasty habit of developing a formula under the assumption that it holds for a very limited range and then calculating the constants by computing out to infinity. For this reason the mathematician is tempted at times to view the whole subject with distrust. This is a mistake. However the formulae may be derived, they frequently prove remarkably trustworthy in practice. The proper attitude is not to reject laws of doubtful origin, but to scrutinize them with care with a view to reaching the true principles underneath. It seems to me that in the last analysis probability is a statistical that is to say an experimental science, and the mathematical problem is to establish rules which yield correct and valuable results.'

The mathematical view that probability is an experimental science based on broad assumptions of doubtful validity should help auditors to regard statistical sampling in a better perspective.

Yours faithfully,

London W1.

Asset or Deferred Charge?

SIR, - My suggestion to José (July 16th issue) concerning the treatment of cost of 'new toilets for employees' is that the amount involved should be charged to 'Building account'. I have presumed that the company in question owns the building it occupies, otherwise the landlord is supposed to bear this charge. Obviously the new toilets form part of the building, and should the company decide to dispose of the building, it will also dispose of the toilets with it.

Therefore, there is no need to identify depreciation of the toilets nor to show 'Toilets for employees' separately under 'Fixed assets'.

Yours faithfully,

Lagos, Nigeria.

E. I. JOHN.

In Parliament

Unqualified Accountants

Mr BARNETT asked the President of the Board of Trade how many unqualified accountants have received authority to practise by his department since the implementation of the Companies Act 1967.

Mr ANTHONY GRANT: Since January 27th, 1968, the date on which the sections of the Companies Act 1967, relating to auditors came into operation, the Board of Trade have authorized 245 persons to be appointed auditors of companies as having obtained adequate knowledge and experience in the course of their employment by a member of a body of accountants recognized for the purposes of section 161 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948. The Board have also authorized 576 persons under section 13 (1) of the Companies Act 1967, to be appointed auditors of the kind of company referred to in that subsection.

Mr BARNETT asked the President of the Board of Trade if he is aware that unqualified accountants who have been given approval to practise by his department are using the designation 'Authorized by the Board of Trade' to imply that they have greater qualifications than members of recognized bodies; if he will take steps to prevent this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr ANTHONY GRANT: The Board of Trade seek to discourage the use of the imprecise description 'Authorized by the Board of Trade' by persons holding their authorizations under section 161 (1) (b) of the Companies Act 1948.

Mr BARNETT asked the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he adopts for giving approval to unqualified accountants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr ANTHONY GRANT: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the issue of an authorization under section 161 (1) (b) of the Companies Act 1948 on the ground that the applicant has obtained adequate knowledge and experience in the course of his employment by a member of a body of accountants recognized by the Board of Trade for the purposes of section 161. The Board do not normally authorize an applicant unless he has spent in the employment of such a member at least five years of which a reasonable proportion has been spent as senior audit clerk with responsibility for the conduct and completion of company audits and unless they are otherwise satisfied as to his knowledge of the application of company and taxation law to company accounts.

Form P11D: Income Limit

Mr STANBROOK asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the fall in the value of the £ sterling, he will raise the income limit above which form P11D is required, in order to save man-hours to the staff of the Inland Revenue and to employers generally.

Mr PATRICK JENKIN: I have noted my hon. friend's suggestion.

Tax Collection: Self-employed Persons

Mr Fox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in view of the present system of collecting tax from self-employed persons, what is the loss to the Exchequer of immigrants working in the United Kingdom on this basis who return home before the tax due can be collected.

Mr PATRICK JENKIN: It is recognized that there is a loss of revenue on account of tax due on business and professional profits earned in the United Kingdom by taxpayers from abroad who return home before it can be collected. The amount lost is not known, but action is in hand to reduce losses on this account.

Companies' Reports

Mr ARTHUR LEWIS asked the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to amend the Companies Act so as to ensure that company reports are properly and promptly rendered, thereby preventing the difficulties which have arisen with insurance, property and other companies in recent years which have caused public concern, and details of which are in the files of his department.

Mr ANTHONY GRANT: In reviewing company law we shall consider the desirability of including in any legislation provisions to ensure the prompt filing of annual returns, including accounts and directors' reports.

Loans: Tax Allowance

Mr GEORGE CUNNINGHAM asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of tax revenue foregone in the fiscal years 1967-68 and 1968-69 by reason of the tax allowance in respect of interest payments on loans for purposes other than house purchase or house improvement.

Mr PATRICK JENKIN: About £25 million for each year leaving aside interest paid for business purposes.

Mr GEORGE CUNNINGHAM asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of tax revenue foregone by reason of the tax allowance in respect of interest payments on loans for house purchase over the last five fiscal years, the number of persons who benefited from this relief, and the average relief per person.

Mr PATRICK JENKIN: The estimated figures are:

Year	Tax relief £m.	Numbers benefiting m.	Average tax relief £
1965-66 ..	135	4.2	32
1966-67 ..	155	4.3	36
1967-68 ..	180	4.3	42

Student Roundabout

ICWA STUDENTS' GUIDE

NOTWITHSTANDING its members' substantial vote this month in favour of the integration scheme, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants shows every intention of making good use of its remaining time as an independent organization. The latest issue of its Students' Guide includes a revised syllabus of examinations which will become effective in June 1971 – that is, within a month of the proposed integration date.

However, under the draft integration proposals, ICWA registered students will be eligible to continue with their own syllabus for a period of up to seven years after integration, so that it cannot be said that the present revision was uncalled for. Nevertheless, the booklet makes no reference to the future of the profession and in this respect it might be regarded as a less than complete 'guide' for today's students.

The 1971 syllabus consists of 18 papers in five parts, and totalling 49 hours. In comparison with the existing syllabus, the Part I paper in Statistics will be extended from two to three hours, and will include Business Mathematics. An advanced paper in the same subject, entitled Management Information and Quantitative Techniques, will replace one of the existing papers in Part IV. Part III will include a specific paper on Data Processing.

LONDON SOCIETY'S AGM

WINCHESTER HOUSE, 100 Broad Street, EC2, will again be the venue for the annual meeting of the Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London on October 13th, commencing at 6 p.m. Members are reminded that any resolution or nominations to the committee must reach the Society's secretary by September 12th.

All members entitled to vote at the meeting are permitted to appoint another person who must, of course, be a member, as his proxy to attend and vote instead of him. This is on condition that no member at the meeting shall hold proxies for more than three members. The appointment of a proxy has to be in writing and should be lodged with the secretary not less than 24 hours before the start of the meeting. Proxy forms are available from the Library, 43 London Wall, London EC2.

BIRMINGHAM'S SUCCESSFUL SUMMER BALL

By tradition, the Summer Ball of the Birmingham Chartered Accountant Students' Society is a very informal occasion, as an alternative to the formal Winter Ball held in February. Articled clerks and their partners discard dinner jackets and females, their long dresses, and arrive in bright 'trendy gear' as if to disprove the hackneyed view of accountants being

PRESTON LOSE LEEDS MATCH

THE Preston and District Chartered Accountant Students' Society have recently played two further cricket matches – one against Leeds CASS and the other against Houghton Cricket Club.

In the match against Leeds (the home team), Preston won the toss and put their opponents in to bat, but in the allotted 25 overs a total of 129 runs for the loss of four wickets were scored against them. The visitors had high hopes of standing their ground when Pickup scored 52, but although Lynch resisted the Leeds bowlers to the extent of 16 not out, the admirable marshalling of his fielders by the Leeds captain ensured the capture of 9 visitors' wickets for a total of 96 runs.

The Preston defeat by Houghton CC was marginal, the respective all-out scores being 142 and 125. Smith scored 31 for Preston, and Boyes, in an all-round exhibition, scored 19 runs and took four wickets.

the dullest form of human life, as often portrayed by the television satirists.

The gay throng of over 400 at the Birmingham University Union, grooved and frugged from 9 p.m. till 2 a.m. to the music of the Montanas and Clearwater, two local pop groups, whilst the latest hit parade sounds blared from the Magic Roundabout discothèque.

PROFESSIONAL CLASSES AID COUNCIL

Members of the professions are by no means immune from the risks of accident, prolonged illness or mental breakdown: indeed, they may be in some respects more vulnerable. The 1969-70 report of the Professional Classes Aid Council devotes considerable space in reply to the criticism that 'well-educated professional people' should be able to provide for their own future, and gives details of a number of cases in which the Council was able to alleviate hardship of a kind not always envisaged in statutory regulations.

During the year to March 31st, 1970, the total assistance paid out to the Council's 520 beneficiaries was £33,514. The Council earnestly solicits, in particular, legacies and covenanted gifts to enable its work to continue.

The present membership of the Council includes Messrs J. A. Allen, F.C.A., P. A. Guilford, M.A., F.C.I.S., F.A.C.C.A., A. C. S. Meynell, F.A.C.C.A., and N. J. Page, M.C., F.C.I.S., F.A.C.C.A., F.S.S., representing The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and the Institute of Actuaries. Sir Thomas Lund, C.B.E., a former Secretary of the Law Society, has been appointed President of the Council in succession to Sir Adrian Boulton, C.H.

MANAGEMENT TECHNOLOGY

Services of both strategic and tactical levels are available from the Matec Group of Companies in the spheres of management, computer and personnel consultancy. The group has been welded together under the name of Management Technology Ltd, its chairman being Mr Thomas Kenny, F.C.A., Council member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, and Vice-Chairman of the Joint Diploma Board in Management Accounting. The managing director, Mr P. B. Sandford-Johnson, F.B.C.S., M.INST.C.S., M.B.I.M. - a senior consultant of some years standing with Cooper Brothers & Co - will see that specialist staff and services are provided to assist management in shaping their organizations and to make the best use of modern managerial control.

COURSES AND CONFERENCESGeneral Practice

Study facilities for recently qualified accountants, organized by Mervyn Hughes & Co Ltd, will be available at the Gloucester Suite, The Waverley Hotel, Southampton Row, London WC1, from October to December this year. There will be lectures (and ample time for discussion) on subjects covering company taxation, capital gains, tax planning, the modern approach to auditing, and electronic data processing.

The first two sessions will be on October 6th and 8th, from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m., when Mr M. Worthington, F.C.A., A.C.W.A., A.T.I.I., will be lecturing on company taxation. Each subject of the course will be dealt with in depth in order to assist practitioners in the 'grooming' of newly qualified men and women for senior professional appointments.

Applications to attend should be made to Mr A. McC. Holmes, M.A., Lectures, Mervyn Hughes & Co, 5-7 Russia Row, London EC2.

Industrial Finance

'Managing industrial finance' is the subject of a five-day residential course specially designed by Business Intelligence Services Ltd to provide an opportunity for professionally qualified people to fit themselves better for an industrial environment. Techniques under discussion will include managing short-term money, planning long-term finance, balance sheet analysis, budgetary control, discounted cash-flow, capital project assessment, and the procedure for claiming tax relief for capital expenditure.

The course will be held on August 9th-14th, at the Berystede Hotel, Ascot, and the fee is £110, to cover instruction, documentation, meals and accommodation. Numbers will be limited and applications to attend should be made to Anthony Cole, BIS Training, 80 Blackfriars Road, London SE1.

Management Accounting

Two management training courses with a difference are being organized by a company which has its roots in the accountancy educational world providing eight-week residential courses for prospective chartered accountants. The difference is that the courses - to be held in Jersey - will be of one week's duration and on two levels: middle management and senior management. Under the principal resident tutor, Mr Mervyn Frankel, F.C.A., assisted by Mr J. Gibbs, A.C.A., and Mr F. E. Worsley, A.C.A., the middle management course will give a comprehensive grounding in management accounting techniques, and will also cover such subjects as balance sheet analysis, marginal costing, budgetary control and pricing.

At senior management level the course participants will be acquainted with the offensive and defensive strategies of take-over bids, the measurement of profitability in capital projects, the impact of taxation on company planning, and the economic usage of computers and computer bureaux. Speakers on this course will include Mr G. A. Thomas, M.A., F.C.A., director, J. H. Vavasour & Co, Ltd, and Mr J. Van der Borgh, F.C.A., former chairman and managing director, Slater Walker (Australia) Ltd.

Inclusive cost of each of these courses is £80, and special low-cost hotel rates have been arranged for wives of participants. Those wishing to attend the courses starting in mid-September should apply to ATF Management Training Centre (Jersey), Colomberie Court, St Helier, Jersey, CI.

“We need about £100,000.”

“Why not try Charterhouse?”

At Charterhouse we've been providing capital for industry for over 30 years. So we do know all about it.

But we are rather different from most of the other people you might advise your clients to talk to. For one thing we really understand the problems of the medium sized business from a businessman's point of view. We have to. We own and run a number of such businesses ourselves. When you talk to us you are talking to experienced businessmen not only to financiers. You — or your clients — will come to know us personally. And, when you know us as individuals, we think you will find that we're direct and easy to deal with. We don't seek control. We do seek to see that our customers get the capital they want. Let's take an example.

In 1966 Charterhouse acquired for £30,000 a 10% interest in a newly-formed group with plant hire and plastics activities. This enabled the owner to have some capital of his own. Charterhouse also made the company an unsecured loan of £170,000 to finance expansion of the plastic business. Subsequently a 50% interest in this was sold to another company, which was able to provide specialised management and technological expertise. Charterhouse has since agreed to acquire a further 15% in the group, and, at the same time, to provide bridging finance of £100,000 to enable the plant hire company to expand to the point at which it can be floated. The value of the group has grown to approximately £1.5m., some five times greater than in 1966. And the owner has become a rich man—through taking the right kind of financial partner at a critical point in the growth of his group.

Charterhouse Development Company, a member of the Charterhouse Group, helped to make this success story possible. It can do the same for your clients.

Contact us, and we'll be pleased to send copies of our booklet on this subject. Next time you're asked about sources of capital, it will be useful to have one handy.

Experts confidently predict the stock market will regain its buoyancy one day.

Trouble is, they never name the day.
Or even the year.

While you're waiting, wouldn't it be sensible to have at least some of your money in the Abbey National?

We realise we are not as exciting as the stock market.

We just hand out a steady old 5% whatever gushers are struck or bubbles burst.

Still, our five per cent is better than some five per cents. Because we pay the income tax due on it.

And it's really equivalent to 8½%, if you pay tax at the standard rate.

All this presupposes you want to keep your capital liquid.

If you don't, you can earn a lot more.

Our S.A.Y.E. scheme, for example, gives far more handsome rates completely free of all income tax, surtax and capital gains tax.

And you can earn nearly 12% with our insurance linked Bounty Bonds.

Let's face it, though, you'll never make a killing with the Abbey National.

But you'll never wish you were dead, either.

TAXATION ACCOUNTANT and ASSISTANT IN INDUSTRY

one of the country's largest industrial organisations, high in the international league, and dealing in a variety of products. We have branches throughout the U.K. as well as important overseas interests and are presently engaged in a substantial programme of plant extension and modernisation.

Concurrently with our physical expansion we are developing and introducing highly sophisticated accounting and financial control procedures.

Despite our size the policy is to keep central control to the minimum and to ensure that our various departments and units have the greatest possible degree of independence.

WE WANT

a qualified accountant with some taxation experience to assist with all aspects of corporate taxation; with a knowledge of government investment etc., grants; able to work effectively with our financial and works accountants.

We need a man who wants to have a personal responsibility to see his job through without close supervision and who will quickly become capable of this.

An assistant for the above post, not necessarily qualified but with a lively mind and ambition - we will ensure the necessary training.

Both vacancies are in our North of England offices.

WE OFFER

an initial salary, to reflect age, experience and immediate potential, in the £2,000/£2,600 range for the senior post and in the £1,400/£2,000 range for the assistant post, both with annual review; a first-class staff pension scheme; assistance with re-location expenses.

Within our several tax departments there are excellent advancement prospects and the opportunity to become a real specialist in this field (but, in an organisation of our size, later movement into other accountancy spheres can usually be arranged if desired).

WE ASK

you to write to the address below, in confidence, giving personal and present job details and indicating when you will be available for interview.

Career accountancy orienteering

A change in professional direction—into Europe—can prove a profitable venture for the career-minded Chartered Accountant.

By moving to the Continent as a senior auditor you will be aiming straight for excellent promotion prospects and the kind of experience essential if you have a manager's post firmly in view.

For those who were attracted to an international firm, or have spent about two years with such a firm after qualifying, managerial status should be reached after about two years in charge of audits of subsidiaries of American and European industrial and commercial companies.

We can only map out your career in broad terms. How quickly you achieve your objectives depends entirely on how well you apply up-to-date auditing techniques, and how capably you lead others on audits and investigation work.

Locations: Paris, Brussels, The Hague, Düsseldorf, Hamburg, Milan, Stockholm.

Please write to C. J. Daintree, European Staff Partner, Price Waterhouse & Co., 47, Avenue de l'Opéra, Paris 2ème.

A profitable trek for accountants- South Africa

For just-qualified men, salaries will be between R4800 and R6000 pa, according to location. Experience since qualifying will mean increases accordingly. Salaries are by no means the only attraction of a two-year spell in South Africa. Our practice there is a thriving and expansive one, using the most advanced techniques in a fast-expanding economy.

We offer an ideal professional environment for ambition. The country offers the ideal living environment—climate, scenery, housing, social amenities. Fares by sea or air will be paid, also return fares after two or three years' service. A settling-in allowance will also be paid.

Annual leave is three weeks, plus two weeks at the end of two years' service; additional overseas leave is granted for long service.

There are medical aid and insurance schemes and a non-contributory pension scheme for permanent staff.

Please write to Price Waterhouse & Co.,

SEEN IT ALL BEFORE?

We could use this space for broad generalisations about what this particular firm can offer the newly qualified accountant. But then generalisations won't tell you anything worthwhile. Thomson McLintock & Co. offer as good experience, training, career opportunities, and remuneration as any large firm. But you can only judge this at an interview.

Write, giving brief career details, to:—

M. G. Adamson,
33 King William Street,
London, E.C.4.

Apart from London, there are vacancies at present in our offices in Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and Sunderland. Interviews will be arranged at the office concerned.

Applications will also be considered from finalists with a successful examination record to date.

A NEW TITLE IN GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

MANAGEMENT OF CHANGE THE ROLE OF INFORMATION

by John R. M. Simmons, M.A., F.I.O.M.

THE BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT is changing more rapidly than ever, and new techniques for providing information are being developed more rapidly than ever. The information expert should not be left to decide what information the manager of change is to be given. The manager must decide. He must, therefore, ensure that he is competent to decide.

This book is the result of research carried out on this theme for The Institute of Office Management. The premises were:

That business management should be directed towards improving the long-term profitability of the business; and

That this can only be achieved by the managers planning projects for novel change which may require information not already available to the business.

The method of research was to propound a hypothetical analysis of the information needed for the management of such projects, to represent the analysis by a check list of questions on the information needed and then to experiment by discussing with business managers how projects are actually conducted in progressive businesses and, in this way, to compare hypothesis with reality.

Because the study is concerned with information for management, it has had to be concerned with management itself, that is, management of change, as distinct from management of the business in being, with which the literature is more accustomed to deal. The study addresses itself to the need for change, even in businesses operating successfully in expanding markets; to the type of organization needed successfully to promote novel changes in the business; and to the need for systematic information for the successful management of change.

Once the information that is needed has been determined, there still remains the problem of obtaining it. This is seen to be a problem of communication, not of making 'communication to' other people, on which attention has hitherto been concentrated, but of getting 'communication from' other people. The book discusses this neglected aspect of communication and draws attention to the need for further study of the subject.

Although the research has been sponsored by The Institute of Office Management, it is dedicated not only to office management but to any business manager who is anxious to change and to enhance the future value of his business. Indeed, the principles which have been evoked are capable of being applied more widely than to commercial and industrial undertakings alone. Wherever costs should be related to benefits produced, we have the essential business situation.

According to the National Economic Development Council Report on Management Recruiting and Development some 350,000 managers are engaged in the manufacturing industry alone. Their jobs and those of their colleagues elsewhere are changing. The new breed of managers are technologically-minded men eager for the right information on which to base their decisions.

Behind the change lies the evolution of management sciences and services – among them operational research, linear programming, network analysis, systems analysis, applications of the computer, consultancy, and marketing research.

The earlier chapters of this book are devoted to planning, organization, direction and policy-making and the process of decision.

Further the author tries to show where operational research, network analysis, computer installations, and consultancy come into activities. Finally he has examined the divisions of marketing and purchasing from the standpoint of a board of directors which is responsible for discharging planning and control functions rather than with the eyes of a sales or purchasing specialist.

For the director or chief executive, his review of basic management activities should strike answering chords. For middle management it should provide a stimulus to progress towards even higher responsibilities.

For the student of management whose immediate objective is the successful completion of a degree or diploma course, or who is on the way to achieving the status of a qualified accountant, cost accountant, company secretary, work study practitioner, purchasing officer, O. & M. manager, marketing manager, or training officer there should be a special benefit to be drawn from the author's integrated approach to his subject.

After the Levy

THE abolition of the betterment levy in respect of all chargeable acts or events taking place after July 22nd, 1970, is clearly a happening of major importance. As from July 23rd, the sale or leasing of land or the commencement of a project of material development is free of levy and, broadly speaking, capital gains arising from land will attract capital gains tax as they did before the enactment of the Land Commission Act 1967 and section 33 of and Schedule 14 to the Finance Act 1967.

Clearly there will have to be some transitional provisions, for the status quo ante cannot be simply restored by the stroke of a pen. Until the promised Bill, or at least a White Paper, is published, the method of dealing with a number of matters must be in doubt, but sufficient is known to be able to draw a number of fairly safe inferences. With commendable promptitude on the part of the publishers, one useful booklet has already appeared indicating how capital gains tax is likely to operate on realizations of development value for transactions after July 22nd.¹

In his statement in the House of Commons on July 22nd (Hansard, vol. 804, No. 18, col. 548), Mr Peter Walker, the Minister of Housing and Local Government, made it clear that levy will continue to be collected on past assessments and will be assessed and collected in respect of chargeable acts or events within Cases A to F which have occurred before July 23rd.

Since the date of contract normally constitutes the date of disposal for the purposes of capital gains tax, whereas in the case of the levy it was the date of completion which was material, levy will not be chargeable in respect of a sale completed after July 22nd, 1970, even if the contract was entered into before that date. But the Minister said in his statement that where completion followed a contract which was made on July 22nd or earlier, provision would be made to ensure that the full amount of the gain was charged to tax, though this is no more than might have been expected.

The change-over from levy to capital gains tax will generally benefit the taxpayer quite appreciably since the rate of tax, in the case of individuals, will be reduced from 40 to 30 per cent and may be reduced still further if the alternative basis of charge under section 21 of the Finance Act 1965 benefits the taxpayer, which will usually be the case where he pays no surtax or surtax of less than 4s in the £.

Companies, on the other hand, will pay the corporation tax rate of 45 per cent (unless reduced) on their capital gains as against the levy rate of 40 per cent, but there are factors which may wipe out this apparent increase in tax, e.g., increases in development value which occurred before April 6th, 1965, and were chargeable to levy, will not be chargeable to capital gains tax. Thus, if land was bought for £3,000 in 1948, valued at £6,000 on April 6th, 1965, and sold for £9,000 in 1960, there will, saving qualifications, be capital gains tax to pay on £3,000, whereas levy could have been payable on £6,000.

Again, the amount paid for development value in any purchase of land between September 22nd, 1965 and April 6th, 1967, was not (subject to the ceiling of the lower of the price paid or £2,500 under section 47 of the Finance Act 1969) generally accepted as establishing a Schedule 5 base value for the purpose of betterment value. For capital gains tax, full credit will be given for the price paid in this period.

Levy was charged on any realization of development value whether it was capital or income, so that under Case B and Case F, category 1, levy was payable not only on premiums but also on the capital value of the rents reserved in so far as they represented a payment for development value. Accordingly, the lessor was charged to levy before he had received the income on which the charge was based. Capital gains tax, on the other hand, is not payable on leases unless there is a premium which is not already taxed as income under the new Schedule A.

It was one of the objections to the levy legislation that it treated the commencement of a project of material development as a realization of development value unless, usually, the development commenced within two years of the acquisition of the land. Under the capital gains tax legislation payment of the tax will be deferred until any profit on the development is realized. Where levy has already been charged under Case C on the commencement of development, it would seem that the new Bill will have to contain a provision to prevent double taxation, i.e., levy on the commencement of the development and capital gains tax on the disposal.

If the development is completed before disposal and no unrealized development value remains in the property disposed of, the 1965 valuation required by paragraph 23 of Schedule 6 to the Finance Act 1965 will not apply and the taxpayer will have the alternative of the 'time apportionment' basis of valuation under paragraph 24 of Schedule 6 if it is more favourable to him.

The change-over from levy to capital gains tax means that owner-occupiers of dwelling-houses which are their only or main residence and which do not normally have more than an acre of garden or grounds will, subject to section 29 of the 1965 Act, be exempt from any tax on capital gains either in current use value or development value. Previously owner-occupiers were not exempt from levy on development value except in certain cases and subject to certain limits.

On the other side of the coin, where the current use value is high, the taxpayer could pay more in capital gains tax than in betterment levy. Thus, if land with a current use value of £800 and purchased for that sum was sold for £1,000, levy would be payable on $\pounds 1,000 - \pounds 800 + \pounds 80 = \pounds 120$, whereas the capital gain will be $\pounds 1,000 - \pounds 800 = \pounds 200$. Such cases, however, will be comparatively rare.

Again, there are some occasions which attract capital gains tax which were not chargeable acts or events for the purposes of levy. Instances of this are the assumed sale of the deceased's assets to his personal representatives on his death, the assumed sale of property at market value where it forms the subject of a gift inter vivos exceeding £100 and the assumed sale and reacquisition by the trustees at periodic intervals, or on the happening of specific events, in connection with settled land and discretionary trusts.

Further, for capital gains tax purposes, the Inspector of Taxes is not bound to accept a sale price if the transaction is not at arm's length or the persons concerned are 'connected persons'. But, on balance, there is no doubt whatever that the change will be greatly to the taxpayer's advantage.

The Land Commission's programme of land acquisition has been brought to a halt. Proposals which have not yet reached an advanced stage are being withdrawn and the Commission is already informing the persons concerned. Proposals which have reached an advanced stage are being reviewed as a matter of urgency. Arrangements are being made for the orderly disposal of land in the Commission's possession at best possible prices, and provision will be made in the Bill for the transfer to an appropriate body of the assets and liabilities remaining on the dissolution of the Commission.

The Minister said in his statement in the Commons that land prices had risen very considerably during the period of the Commission and that the Commission had failed either to stabilize land prices or to make a worth-while contribution to the release of land in the areas of acute land shortage. The release of land by local authorities was almost the most important task in terms of the whole housing programme and he was discussing with local authorities how they could help with these problems through the release of more land and in other ways.

The Revenue Loses

IN the continuing war between the Revenue and the taxpayer, the Revenue has just lost two more battles in the High Court. One of these, concerning the deductibility of entertainment expenses, is likely to have far-reaching consequences.

The facts were that journalists employed by Associated Newspapers incurred expenses of £67,143 in entertaining informants, contributors and employees of news agencies. The company claimed that this sum was deductible in its computations under section 411 (9), Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970, which allows a deduction for expenditure incurred in 'the provision by any person of anything which it is his trade to provide'. In the company's view, 'anything' included newspapers.

These notions came as a surprise to the Revenue, who had assumed subsection 9 to be merely a saving provision for the catering industry. They lost before the Special Commissioners, and again in the High Court.

Since this is a test case the Revenue may appeal, but in the meantime Mr Justice Megarry's ruling must give the taxpayer considerable satisfaction. Although the judge warned that his decision should not be taken as 'driving a coach and horses' through the 1965 Act, it leaves ample scope for claiming entertainment expenses which were previously considered non-allowable.

It is impossible to feel any sympathy for the Revenue in this situation. Entertainment expenses in many businesses are essential for their existence and their growth, and the Revenue already had powers for dealing with cases of abuse under the 'wholly and exclusively' rule. Persuading the Government of the necessity for a blanket prohibition was not only iniquitous; it was irresponsible. Now the Revenue have lost their trousers despite having belt and braces, it is time surely to repeal section 411 entirely, and to rely on common sense and section 130 to maintain justice.

The other case (Eastham v. Leigh, London and Provincial Properties Ltd) is important because it throws some light on the meaning of a conditional contract for capital gains purposes. Here, a building company agreed with the site-owners to erect a building within two years, at a certain cost. The parties agreed in 1962 that if the building was completed within the time limit, the builders should be granted a 125-year lease from 1962 at a rental of £5,000 p.a. The building was duly completed and the lease granted. In 1965 the building company assigned the lease for £567,000.

The Revenue assessed the company under Case VII of Schedule D on the basis that the 1962 contract was a conditional contract, and that therefore the lease was 'acquired' in 1964 and sold within three years. In the High Court, Goff, J, said a contract was not 'conditional' where there was no condition prerequisite to forming a binding agreement. Practitioners may well wish to review their 'conditional contract' cases in the light of this decision.

Chancellor's New Tax Adviser

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER has appointed Mr F. Arthur Cockfield, LL.B., B.SC.(ECON.), to be his adviser on taxation policy. A former member of the Board of Inland Revenue and of the National Economic Development Council, Mr Cockfield also served on the advisory panel which, under the late Iain Macleod, helped to develop the Conservative Party's taxation policy for this year's general election.

Now aged 53, Mr Cockfield graduated from the London School of Economics, and was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1942. He joined the board of Boots Pure Drug Co Ltd in 1953 as finance director, becoming managing director from 1961 to 1967. From 1963 to 1967 he was also a member of the Court of Governors of Nottingham University.

Mr Cockfield, who will be based at the Treasury although occupying no fixed place in its hierarchy, has already started work in his new appointment. He will maintain close liaison with the Inland Revenue, which – as was also announced this week – has recently commissioned a survey of clerical wastage in its Chief Inspector's Branch.

Associated Industrial Consultants Ltd has been retained to undertake a pilot survey of eight Revenue offices this month, followed by a main survey of 33 others. Concern has been expressed by both the Department and the Inland Revenue Staff Federation about the heavy staff turnover and about its effect on work loads. Back duty inquiries are believed to be up to three years in arrear at some offices.

Impressions of Whitehall

WITHOUT doubt, the British constitution is a very subtle and illogical arrangement, and our system of government works better than it ever ought to do'. These are the impressions of Mr F. Clive de Paula, C.B.E., T.D., F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., after his two and a half years' secondment as an industrial adviser to the previous Government, as recorded in an 'open letter' published in The Times earlier this week.

Although Mr de Paula apparently met 'at least one person who precisely fitted the classical caricature of a civil servant', he nevertheless was sincerely impressed by the quality of the men, particularly at the Under-Secretary and Assistant Secretary levels, who direct the departments of State. But whereas those who direct major industrial enterprises have been schooled in the difficult self-discipline of taking and accepting responsibility for decisions, administrative civil servants are more concerned with presenting to the minister who is the political head of their department a well-balance brief on which he must decide. Civil servants in consequence tend not to develop into decision-makers.

Another substantial criticism of the Civil Service is that, whereas the success of many businessmen lies in their ability to recognize and cut out the unsuccessful venture, the process of inter-departmental consultation in Whitehall makes it very difficult to start anything and almost impossible to stop it. When officials recognize that there is something wrong with the system, they seem less ready than business managers to do something about it.

As recorded in The Accountant two weeks ago, Mr de Paula recently became senior partner in the management consultancy firm of Robson Morrow & Co, in succession to Mr L. W. Robson, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A. His father, the late F. R. M. de Paula, C.B.E., F.C.A., left public practice in the 1930s to take up the appointment of chief accountant of the Dunlop Rubber Company where, against the innate conservatism of the profession in those days, he rapidly established himself as a pioneer of more informative accounting.

Liquidator's Appointment Upheld

IN the Chancery Division last week, Plowman, J, approved the appointment of Mr D. A. Clarke, LL.B., F.C.A., as liquidator of Calgary and Edmonton Land Company. There was, said the judge, no liquidator acting, and in the circumstances it was appropriate for the Court to appoint one.

Last April, Mr and Mrs Isaac Hillman, who were the sole directors and also the principal shareholders of the company, gave notice of an extraordinary general meeting for the purpose of winding it up. It was evidently intended that this should proceed as a members' voluntary winding-up, and on May 20th Mr Hillman executed a statutory declaration of solvency. At the extraordinary general meeting on May 21st the resolution to wind up was duly passed, but Mr Hillman (who was in the chair) then purported to close the meeting before a liquidator had been appointed. The remaining shareholders elected another chairman and passed a resolution for the appointment of Mr K. R. Cork, F.C.A., as liquidator.

A dispute then arose as to whether the matter should proceed as a members' or a creditors' winding-up, as the declaration of solvency had been executed by only one director, and Mr Cork declined to act until the legal position had been clarified. On July 9th Mr

Registrar Berkeley took the view that as Mr Cork was not acceptable to Mr and Mrs Hillman, an independent appointment was to be preferred, and the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants was asked to nominate a suitable person. The President had nominated Mr Clarke and Plowman, J, saw no good reason to disturb that appointment.

The apparent background to the case was that Mr and Mrs Hillman had charged their shareholdings, and the assets of the company and its subsidiaries, to a bank as security for substantial advances. The bank had been trying to get back its money, which Mr and Mrs Hillman were doing their best to frustrate. This had led to 'a welter of litigation' of which the present proceedings were only a small part.

Professional Salaries

A GENERATION ago, articled clerks still paid premiums and worked for pocket money. Nowadays the London salary range for new entrants runs from £650 for the 'O' level school-leaver to £1,200 for the 22-year-old graduate, rising to £1,100-£1,500 in the final year of articles if the clerk has by then passed Part I of his final examination.

These figures are taken from a survey of salaries in the profession, currently being distributed by Hamilton Executive Consultants to firms of chartered accountants in the London area. According to this source, a newly qualified man with a good examination record should have no difficulty in finding a position in the range of £2,000-£2,400, rising to £3,000 after two or three years' post-qualification experience.

Within the past three years, professional firms generally have increased their salaries to compete with those offered by industry and commerce. Hamilton's suggest that promotion prospects for unqualified staff in professional offices are limited, and that the unqualified man is more likely to 'opt out'; or he may 'apply to a different accountancy body and qualify through exemptions, and thus compete in industry and commerce as a "qualified man" '.

In the context of the present integration scheme, it would be helpful to know which bodies of accountants the author of this passage had in mind.

Tax Takes Increased Profits

FURTHER evidence of the tightening credit situation and its consequences for industrial and commercial companies is provided in the new (July) issue of Financial Statistics (HMSO, 16s). Although total corporate income was higher in the first quarter of 1970 than in the same quarter a year ago, the increased profits were more than absorbed by higher tax payments.

The difficulties encountered by companies in borrowing are reflected in a running down of their financial assets to finance fixed investment. The latter, in current price terms, was some £100 million higher

Institute's Tax Course

'Overseas activities and investment' formed the subject of the latest tax practice course held by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, last week. Among the subjects considered were 'Taxation of overseas trading profits', 'Taxation of income and gains from portfolio investment overseas' and 'Double tax relief'.

in the first quarter of 1970 than a year ago. Despite the difficulty of borrowing and the consequent liquidation of some assets, the banks still lent over £400 million and a further £100 million was obtained from other financial institutions. Nevertheless, holdings of identifiable liquid assets at the end of the first quarter this year were at a lower level than a year earlier. The liquidity problems of companies were aggravated by the state of the stock-markets and the recent level of new issues was in consequence exceptionally low.

Despite the weakness of the stock-markets, super-annuation funds were strong purchasers of company securities in the first quarter, their net purchases of ordinary shares amounting to £103 million. They also took advantage of the high yields available on government stocks and, for the third consecutive quarter, increased their holdings thereof. There is an obvious difficulty for such funds which can hardly defer, indefinitely, investment of their large and continuous inflow of cash. In the longer run, however, given continuing inflation and the unlikelihood of any significant change in the rate of depreciation of the currency, equities must – other things being equal – still provide the best hedge.

THIS IS MY LIFE

The Bad Old Days of Articles

by An Industrious Accountant

I RECENTLY found in the back of a drawer a faded file containing some old letters and school exam. results, and among them were the articles of clerkship that I signed nearly 40 years ago. They make interesting reading. How often the official phraseology may have changed over the intervening decades, or how the proposed new form of training contract may be worded, I've no idea, but there's ample room for improvement.

The terms provided for me to serve my principal faithfully and diligently for five years; not to cancel, obliterate, alter, spoil, destroy, waste, embezzle, spend or make away with his property, all given in verbose detail; not to copy his papers, and to reimburse pretty well everybody in sight who might have suffered by my misbehaviour, negligence, or improper conduct.

Fair enough, no doubt, but I looked in vain for any covenant on his part to reimburse me for his misbehaviour or neglect.

Next came promises to keep the secrets of my principal and his partners, clients, and employers, to obey and execute his commands readily and cheerfully; to conduct myself with all due diligence, honesty and propriety, not to absent myself without his consent, and to serve him faithfully as a clerk ought to do in all things whatsoever. In consideration of the foregoing, and of payment of a premium equivalent to over £1,000 in today's money, he agreed to do his part as specified.

I had a momentary recollection of him – a courtly, pleasant, unassuming citizen, devoid of malice, guile, or aggression, and well-liked by his colleagues, as I know from hindsight. If I remember him also as insensitive, stupid, and too obsessed with his own onerous problems to spare time for the problems of others, well, it was a less sophisticated time when altruism was scarce in high places.

Anyhow, his responsibilities were few, nebulous, and brief. He agreed to take me as his articled clerk, and to afford me, to the best of his ability and power, such reasonable opportunities and work as might be required to enable me to acquire the art, science and knowledge of a professional accountant. Except for some details, that was all.

There was no reference to annual leave or to special exam. leave (in fact, he gave both generously), or to salary (he gave me allowances totalling £70 over the five years, but that was probably the standard for the time and place), or to training as such. In the thinking of the Institute in those days it was sufficient to offer opportunities; it was no one's moral responsibility to follow up or to help the lame dogs over stiles.

In practice, of course, those loosely worded agreements enabled lazy or unprincipled principals to exploit their articled clerks disgracefully. I saw my principal scarcely a dozen times in those five years; only once did we discuss, very briefly, my future when the five years would run out. I spent the first three months of articled service in the filing office with little enough to do, before commencing on the treadmill of junior work on audits.

Thereafter, with my articled companions, I was passed from one uninterested senior to another, slogging away at stock books and debtors' ledgers, rarely seeing the finished accounts, not having knotty points of principle explained. We studied our correspondence courses and got grinds; we worked our way up to the responsible and honoured posts of final year clerks; our articles terminated. In the cold light of economic pressure, we assessed our saleable assets: a certificate of service as required by the bye-laws, some woefully haphazard experience, and a determination to take our Finals three months later.

It's no use crying over spilt milk, but one hopes the new generation's saucer is less wobbly than ours was.

Value Added Tax – I

by T. A. KENNEDY, B.A.

1. Introduction

ANY individual taxation device has to be seen in the broad context of the requirements of the fiscal system as a whole. Taxation is levied for the purpose of raising revenue to pay for public expenditure and, nowadays, for influencing the level and pattern of economic activity. Therefore, in considering the possible introduction of any new tax or the extension of an old one the Chancellor of the Exchequer has to take a great many factors into account, and which go far beyond the criteria postulated by Adam Smith who in The Wealth of Nations laid down four basic rules for tax gathering: first, account should be taken of the ability to pay, second, taxes should be cheap to collect in relation to the amount of revenue raised, third, the taxpayer should know his liability with certainty, and fourth, the convenience of the taxpayer should be taken into account.

1.2. With the exception of the first, these are primarily administrative considerations; the first contains elements of social judgement. Today we live in a more complex and managed world, and the economic effects of fiscal policy loom very large: indeed the fundamentals of budgetary discussion are now as much in terms of demand management and of how much should be 'put in' or 'taken out' of the economy as with specific tax proposals. A Chancellor today has to decide how he wishes to influence the level of total expenditure as well as how much revenue is needed to pay for public sector activities, and who should pay it, whether individuals or companies and whether by their incomes or through their expenditure.

1.3. A second general consideration, which has to be borne in mind when considering the possible effects of any new tax such as a value added tax, is that we are not starting from scratch with a clean fiscal slate – indeed, many would argue that it is a very dirty slate indeed. We are starting from a highly complex system which reflects past and present political, economic and social priorities and in which individual taxes and benefits have to be seen very much in relation to and interdependent on one another. Some taxes are incompatible with others, while many require to be supplemented with others or offset in some directions by particular benefits or other reliefs. For example, a value added tax would probably be incompatible with the maintenance of purchase tax; personal income tax supplements corporation tax in dealing with unincorporated businesses; pensions and family allowances may need to be modified following changes in expenditure taxes. In other words, any tax change, whether the modification or abolition of an existing tax or the introduction of a new one, impinges on the fiscal system as a whole. Much current controversy about selective employment tax, for example, does not fully take account of the alternative effects of raising the same amount of revenue in different ways, but treats the tax, favourably or unfavourably, as though the option was the straight alternative of the SET or nothing. If it could be assumed that the whole of the £500 million or so of revenue currently being raised by SET could be foregone and was available for tax reductions there would no doubt be plenty of other claimants for relief both on grounds of economic efficiency and equity.

1.4. This leads to a third general consideration, which is that the issue of value added taxation in this country has to be seen as an exercise in tax switching and not as a separate and independent issue. Unless there were to be a sudden and entirely unforeseeable requirement for additional revenue on a very large scale the introduction of a VAT would make the abolition or substantial modification of some other taxes essential. This could have many consequential effects, social and economic, on the balance of our fiscal system, and the ripples which these generated would spread very widely. It is, therefore, insufficient to pose the question in the form 'Is a VAT desirable?' without the parallel questions 'Is the modification of taxes A, B and C and of benefits X, Y and Z desirable?'

1.5. A final consideration by way of introduction is that we may find ourselves in the position where the question is not one of whether or not we in Britain should adopt a value added tax, but of how should we do it, and what would be its effects. It is almost certain that if we become members of the EEC then we shall have to adopt the common system of tax on value added and most likely in the form specified in the EEC Commission's directives of 1967. Some adaptation or modification might be possible to take account of existing United Kingdom practices and requirements but this is by no means certain and a safe assumption would be that we would have to adopt their system in all its essential features. For this last reason the general form of the tax which is discussed in this paper is that which is used in the EEC.

1.6. Thus we have the strong possibility that we will adopt a VAT in this country, that this will involve a major tax switching operation, and that this in turn will raise various considerations of equity and economic efficiency quite independent of the VAT itself but arising from the impact of VAT on a number of other taxes and benefits.

2. Mechanism of a VAT

2.1. To turn now to the VAT itself, this is a tax about which there has been a great deal of misunderstanding. To illustrate very simply some of its basic principles and characteristics and the economic issues which it raises, we may imagine the case of a craftsman, who buys no materials or tools – perhaps he makes sculptures out of driftwood which he sells before tax for £100. If a VAT is imposed at, say, 10 per cent he will have to pay £10 to the authorities, which he will try to recover by passing on the £10 liability he has incurred in the price to the customer. The tax inclusive selling price is now £110. (The clear analogy is with purchase tax or any other single stage sales tax.) The tax may, however, not be wholly passed on to the consumer: some or all of it may be absorbed by a reduction in the craftsman's profit; just how much is absorbed in this way will depend on the state of the market for driftwood sculptures but the final effect of a VAT on prices will depend on the extent to which the tax is passed on. To the extent that it is passed on it is borne by the consumer (although initially paid over by the producer), and it is, therefore, effectively a tax on consumption.

The first part of a paper presented at the recent Oxford Summer Course of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The author is Economics Director, NEDO.

2.2. To take the illustration a stage further, if the craftsman is now taken up by a dealer who buys, stores, displays, and finally markets the sculptures, then, again assuming that the tax is passed on in full, the following sequence of transactions might arise:

- (i) Craftsman sells at tax exclusive price of £100 plus £10 VAT = selling price £110.
- (ii) Dealer sells at tax exclusive price of £200 plus £20 VAT = selling price £220.
- (iii) Dealer can offset the £10 VAT passed on to him in his tax inclusive purchase price against his own £20 liability making his actual payment £10 (i.e., 10 per cent of the difference between his tax exclusive buying and selling prices).

Again the total tax (£20) is finally borne by the consumer (because in the absence of the tax the price would have been £200) but it has been paid over to the Government in fractional instalments by the producers in proportion to the 'value added' at each stage. It should be noted that the tax is not cumulative, and there is no tax on tax. The dealer effectively pays no tax on his purchased inputs because he can claim a credit to offset against his tax liability. He can do this only because he has such a liability and is within the VAT system. The consumer, who is outside the system cannot do so. If, for some reason, art dealers were exempt from paying the tax the presumption is that in this case he would simply pass on the £10 tax component, which he had paid to the craftsman, in the final selling price to the consumer. Where a purchase represents a business input the tax element in its price can be offset against tax liabilities arising on sales. In general an individual or an enterprise which is not liable to pay the tax, through specific exemption or as a final buyer, cannot claim a tax credit.

2.3. Although in the illustration above the tax liability was presented as arising on the value of sales (and offset by the tax already paid on purchases), it can be seen in a more realistic business situation as a tax on the payroll and profits of a company, or because exports are exempt and imports are taxable, it can be more broadly represented as falling on payroll, profits and imports less exports.

2.4. While the VAT is not payable on exports the exporter can still claim the credits for the tax invoiced to him on his purchased inputs. This has led some to the oversimplified view that a VAT makes exports more profitable than home sales. Clearly, however, if the tax liability can be passed on, this is not so. Purchase tax and excise duties are not payable on exports of motor-cars and whisky, for example, but this does not affect the relative profitability of home and export sales.

2.5. The real 'export' or economic case for a VAT is in fact more complicated and arises from the tax switching possibilities which are presented. In essence the argument is that if a tax which does not fall on or enter indirectly into export prices (e.g., a VAT) can be substituted for one that does then export competitiveness and profitability will be increased. Thus, for example (and this is the case most often discussed) if corporation tax enters into costs and prices and were to be cut, and if the revenue were to be replaced by a VAT which does not so enter, then other things being equal, export prices could be lowered and become more competitive and/or profit margins could be increased. This was the proposition examined by the Richardson committee in 1963, and by the NEDO VAT committee, through the EDCs, in 1969. The former concluded that there was likely to be little or nothing in the argument in practice chiefly because other things would not be equal. In particular, higher taxes on consumption would lead to higher wages and thence to higher costs thus offsetting any opportunity to lower prices or raise profits. In any case, it was argued, profits tax is not passed on in prices so that to cut it would have no effect on prices. The NEDO study, drawing on evidence and opinions from the EDC, was less categorical but still inconclusive. The main doubt being that a sufficiently large cut in corporation tax to produce a price effect was unlikely to be forthcoming for purely practical and administrative reasons.

2.6. The argument that a VAT would be a stimulus to investment and efficiency depends on the effect which the tax would have on the relative profitability of more and less mechanized and efficient firms. In the former case if wages rise as a result of VAT then the costs of the least labour intensive firms will be least affected. In the latter case the more efficient firms (as measured by profitability) will benefit more from a cut in corporation tax than the less efficient. Again the Richardson committee was sceptical arguing that investment was not much influenced by changes in post tax profits, and the evidence submitted to the NEDO inquiry was inconclusive as to the likely results in practice.

2.7. It is clear that these fundamental economic considerations cannot be resolved without much firmer empirical evidence than we now possess on business behaviour with regard to:

- (a) how far changes in the levels of taxation on corporate profits are likely to be reflected in prices;
- (b) how far VAT would be absorbed or passed on in higher prices at each stage in the productive process;
- (c) how far higher prices would lead to higher wages and costs.

3. The practicalities of VAT

3.1. The above arguments have become part of the theology of VAT, and at one time were regarded by some advocates as a prime reason for its introduction in this country. In a purely formal sense they have much to be said for them – however, the practicalities of the situation are such that it is almost impossible to judge the effects with any accuracy, either in advance or in retrospect, not least because the concept of an elegant and precise trade off between a significant reduction in corporation tax and an equal yielding VAT is not a very realistic one. For the reasons already given, other taxes would have to be changed and other fiscal adjustments made so that the trade-off effects would be likely to be complex, obscured and heavily overlaid by other influences.

3.2. It is therefore necessary to go from the field of general principles to the practicalities of the situation because quite apart from the possibility of UK membership of the EEC these general economic arguments are by no means the only reason why a VAT should be considered as a practical device in the UK.

3.3. A VAT would be a device for raising revenue – either new revenue or revenue in replacement of that foregone by switching away from other taxes. For that reason the major considerations to be taken into account are as much arithmetical as political or philosophical and it is important, therefore, to look at the revenue structure of the economy and its possible modification.

United Kingdom Taxation 1969-70

Income tax	4,900
Surtax	255
Corporation tax	1,687
Capital gains tax	127
Death duties	365
Other Inland Revenue duties	142
Drink and tobacco	2,005
Oil	1,302
Purchase tax	1,110
Betting and gaming	119
Import duties	228
Other Customs and Excise duties	188
SET (net)	527
Motor vehicle duties	417
Other receipts	533
TOTAL	£13,905*

* Gross receipts amount to £15,266 million. The difference between this and the above figure is accounted for by the difference between the gross and net SET receipts.

3.4. It is clear that the amounts involved in most of the major taxes are very large indeed, and that if a VAT were to replace any of them it would have to raise an equivalently large slice of revenue. This immediately suggests that any prospects of a substantial simplification of the tax structure being made possible by a VAT are unlikely to be fulfilled, since most of the complexities arise not from the number or form of the taxes themselves but from their internal administrative features.

3.5. How much revenue could a VAT raise? As it is essentially a tax on consumption, its yield can be seen as a function of consumers expenditure. Last year this was running at about £28,600 million so that it might be said that a 10 per cent VAT on all forms of spending would raise some £2,860 million (about 42 per cent of the amount now raised by personal and corporate income taxes). Of course, this assumes that the coverage of the tax was total, and was imposed on top of the expenditure taxes already levied and which appear in the total of consumer spending above. In fact the tax base would be a good deal narrower, and the coverage of the tax, which is in principle a comprehensive one, and exemptions to it, would involve a series of major political and administrative decisions. It is not at all difficult to think of candidates for exemption: some immediate possibilities which come to mind are food, books and newspapers, small firms, financial institutions, rents, housing and construction, domestic services, health, education, travel and communications, export services and shipping agents, charities and religious social and artistic organizations, public utilities, etc. All of these represent the kind of activity for which at least a good prima facie case for exemption can be made out, and it is a very formidable list to which it is probably as easy to add as to take away. Moreover, the reduction or abolition of other taxes would further reduce the effective potential tax base probably to around £15,000-£16,000 million, and the yield of a 10 per cent tax to around £1,500-£1,600 million. Clearly as can be seen from the table this is barely enough to replace over £1,100 million of purchase tax and about £500 million of SET, which (leaving the drink, tobacco, and oils taxes aside) constitute the bulk of our present taxes on expenditure. In addition, it would not provide sufficient revenue to make possible a substantial cut in direct taxation. If, as is likely, additional revenue were to be required there are four ways which might be used either singly or in combination: by a higher basic rate than 10 per cent, by an additional higher rate, by the retention of some existing taxes (such as the top rate of purchase tax) or of course by limiting the list of exemptions.

3.6. As soon as one raises these practical issues and leaves the more rarefied atmosphere of theoretical gains and losses a number of problems becomes apparent. For example, while purchase tax is a tax on specified goods, a VAT is (in principle at least) a tax on all transactions (goods and services) with specified exemptions. As soon as particular categories of transaction have to be specified, whether for inclusion or exclusion, problems of definition arise which add to administrative complexity. Also, of course, differential rates, where similar problems arise, would add to the problems of both government and business managements. The relatively limited coverage of purchase tax already has difficulties and anomalies which would be multiplied with a more broadly based tax which still endeavoured to retain some selectivity.

3.7. In contemplating a VAT, therefore, and having regard to the perennial conflict between equity and simplicity it would not be unreasonable to think in terms of a system having an exemption list roughly of the kind suggested above, say a basic rate of around 15 per cent, and probably an additional higher rate in the region of 25-30 per cent. In exchange for this it would be possible to replace purchase tax and SET and still have some £300-£400 million available for the reduction of other taxes, perhaps 5-6 percentage points off corporation tax and parallel adjustments to personal income tax to put unincorporated businesses on the same footing.

3.8. What kind of effect would this have on living costs and hence on wages? Clearly it would be likely to give another twist to the inflationary spiral, but much would depend on the general wage/price climate at the time and the extent to which there was a major shift from direct to indirect taxation. Some goods would, of course, fall in price (for example, those now attracting the higher rates of purchase tax) while others would rise (for example, those goods now paying little or no tax and those services now paying only SET). A special problem would arise with the drink and tobacco taxes and the extent to which they were assimilated in the VAT system. Some of the flexibility and selectivity of purchase tax, and indeed of SET would be lost if they were to be abolished, and if such selectivity were desired for social or general economic reasons it would have to be achieved in some other way.

3.9. One of the criticisms which is sometimes made of the SET is that it is a discriminatory tax, but all taxes are discriminatory in one sense or another, and the real question is whether the basis of discrimination is valid and acceptable. Indeed, the principle of selectivity and discrimination is one which is very deeply rooted in our tax system as a whole: some persons, places, purchases and pastimes are taxed or subsidized while others are not. At any one time the fiscal system as a whole represents a complex balance of these various selective impositions and disbursements. As we have seen, one result of the introduction of a VAT and the consequential removal or modification of other taxes would be to disturb this balance and generally to reduce the overall selectivity of the system, i.e., to make taxation more neutral as between one form of expenditure and another.

3.10. There are some aspects of the possible replacement of purchase tax and SET by a VAT which are similar to the situation of the switch from corporation tax. Although it is the intention that purchase tax should not fall on production costs, and the definitions of products liable to the tax are very carefully drawn with this in mind, it is inevitable that some of industry's purchases should contain an element of purchase tax overspill. For example, the tax on motor-cars purchased for company use, and certain office fixtures and fittings will enter into company costs and other indirect taxes have the same effect: SET, the tax on hydrocarbon oils and motor vehicle licences all enter quite substantially into production costs and hence into prices – of both home goods and exports. Technically these taxes could be rebated, but whether for revenue or administrative reasons they have not been, and our attempt to provide a general rebate through the export rebate scheme in 1965 ran foul of our trading partners in EFTA. To the extent that a VAT replaced any or all of these taxes the overspill problem would be avoided, costs would be lowered, and goods by that amount would become more competitive. It may be noted, however, that the biggest item of purchase tax overspill, i.e., that derived from the purchase of motor-cars for business use is not allowable in some Continental countries having a VAT and hydrocarbon oil taxes are also not usually in the VAT system. It is thus not the present problem of overspill which is serious but it is one important reason for preferring a VAT, which is automatically offset, to the alternative of a general sales tax, which would require special measures if it were to be rebated.

3.11. In summing up the general economic considerations, we may conclude that these are still indeterminate. There are some identifiable benefits which could be derived from a VAT, but there are also changes which many might regard as harmful. There is some evidence to support the view that a direct equal yielding switch from corporation tax to VAT, if it were practicable, would benefit exports and the capital intensive firm but once the extent of the switch goes wider than this, as it would have to, then even theoretically these gains become less likely. This of course does not condemn the tax – indeed it is, perhaps, only because some of its more enthusiastic supporters have claimed such advantages for it that reservations about these have been sufficient to cast doubts on the desirability of the tax as a whole. Effectiveness in raising revenue and broad equity as between taxpayers have often enough been a sufficient criterion for the introduction of a tax without extravagant claims being necessary as to its positive economic virtues. It is also obvious that some notions about its possible use as a means of simplifying the tax system must evaporate as soon as the revenue arithmetic is examined. Complexity in taxation arises from a desire to achieve equity as between one taxpayer and another within the framework of an individual tax, and, unless this is foregone, only the abolition of the tax in question (not a reduction in its rates) would be likely to effect any dramatic simplification.

(To be concluded.)

Employee Evaluation

by J. V. C. BUTCHER, A.C.A.

SHAREHOLDERS will be familiar with the chairman's report which concludes:

'It is only fitting that I should, once again, pay a tribute to the loyalty and enthusiasm of our employees, who contribute so much to the continued success of the company.'

But how much do the employees really contribute and why don't the accounts show the value of the employees to the company? This is surely the most glaring omission from the assets listed in every balance sheet, for the loyalty and ability of the employees must be one of the greatest assets of any company.

In an open labour market, where supply equals demand, the value of an unskilled labourer is virtually nil, for if he leaves he can be replaced at little cost to the company. In a tight executive talent market, where supply is far outstripped by demand, the value to a large company of a managing director with at least ten years' useful life ahead of him is enormous. From time to time, when the top man of a quoted company suddenly dies, the price of the company's shares drops a few points. The impact of his death on the company's fortunes is enough to affect the share price, until a replacement has established himself.

The value of star players to a League football club is quite obvious from the enormous transfer fees which are paid. And yet it is the practice in football clubs' accounts to write off transfer fees received and paid to profit and loss account each year. But transfer fees don't apply in business, where a key man can go 'next door' at the drop of a hat. Such a move can cost the company thousands of pounds, especially when he takes customers or trade secrets with him to a competitor. Even a skilled worker can be worth hundreds of pounds in terms of replacement value.

Basis of valuation

So far, little attempt has been made by companies in the United Kingdom to evaluate employees for accounting purposes. In the United States the R. G. Barry Corporation has devised a method of valuing individual senior staff on a cost basis. The value of each man, which is the actual cost of recruiting and training him, is then amortized over his working life. But the true value of a good employee is not related so much to his cost as to his potential. Companies do not keep a 'stock of employees' to be valued at the lower of cost or net realizable value.

In assessing the value of an employee the cost of his replacement ought to be the overriding consideration. Despite the inflated views that some men have of their own importance, very few are irreplaceable. Some men may take longer to replace than others, or may be more expensive to replace than others: thus a senior scientist will take his knowledge of a research project with him when he leaves. Even if an equally good replacement can be quickly found and the company has retained the documentation, it may be very expensive to get back to where he left off, and the delay could be crucial if he has left to join a competitor working on a similar project.

Knowledge, experience and ability need to be taken into account in assessing an employee's replacement value. However, if the employee is due to retire soon, or he suffers from ill health, or his loyalty is suspect, his potential can be greatly reduced. In the same way, the value of a man with potentially obsolete skills can, like a potentially obsolete machine, be much lower than book value. Even with valuable knowledge, experience and ability, the state of the labour market, both within and outside the company, can affect a man's replacement value. For example, a large organization may be able to replace a senior executive at no cost by promotion. If it can effect similar replacements by promotion down the line, the cost of replacing the senior executive is merely the cost of replacing the most junior employee.

This raises the question of whether the replacement costs of employees should be evaluated on a total or individual basis. It is necessary to allow for the element of risk when calculating the replacement value of an employee who would normally be replaced from within, i.e., the risk that the replacement might not be there when he is needed. A similar problem is that of the team of employees whose loyalty is to the team leader rather than to the company. This applies particularly amongst scientists and, if a research team leaves, the costs of its replacement can be enormous. Whenever there is an identifiable team, it should be valued as a unit and allowance then made for the probability that individual members will remain with the company.

The cost of recruiting and training a replacement is an obvious factor. The proportion of the replacement's salary or wages spent during training, the value of the time spent by others in training the replacement and all other costs that have to be incurred to bring the replacement up to the standard of his predecessor must be included.

The actual method of valuation must be based on correct accounting principles. It is common accounting practice to value stock at the lower of cost or net realiz-able value. But to value employees in this way is wrong, as they are not 'stock'. Employees should be valued at 'net replacement cost' or 'net cost of retention', which is a negative value.

Net replacement cost

Net replacement cost means the net cost of effecting a replacement of the employee. Take, for example, John Smith, a salesman, whose salary and other emoluments amount to £2,500. In the following year it is estimated that he will contribute £15,000 to the company's profits. If he were to leave, he could be replaced at a cost of £1,100 by a salesman recruited from outside at a salary of £2,400, who would only contribute £10,000 to the company's profits during the following year, after which he would contribute the same as John Smith. The net gain if John Smith stays is £12,500 (£15,000 - £2,500) and if he leaves £6,500 (£10,000 - £1,100 - £2,400). Thus his net replacement cost is £6,000 (£12,500 - £6,500).

It should be noted that contributions to profit are expressed gross of tax and all wages and salaries. In this way, after deducting the individual's pay, net replacement costs are properly related to the contribution to profits before taxation.

Net cost of retention

Net cost of retention is illustrated by the following example. Peter Jones, who is due to retire in five years' time, will earn an average salary of £3,500 per annum during this time and is expected to contribute a total of £50,000 to profits. But he could easily be replaced from outside by another employee, whose salary would average £3,300 and who would be expected to contribute £75,000 to profits. It is estimated that a replacement would cost £1,500 to recruit and train, and that if Peter Jones were to be retired he would have to be given a 'golden handshake' of £10,000.

In calculating the net cost of retaining Peter Jones, the discounted cash flow technique should be used with the rate that is equivalent to the company's pre-tax return on capital employed, which should include the total of net replacement costs of employees. However, for simplicity, the DCF factor has been ignored here. The net gain if Peter Jones stays is £32,500 (£50,000 - 5 × £3,500) and if he leaves £57,000 (£75,000 - £1,500 - 5 × £3,300). Clearly, if Peter Jones were to leave of his own choosing, the company would be better off and allowance should be made for the chances of this happening. The fact that it would only cost £10,000 to retire him means that management must decide whether to do this or not. Otherwise the net cost of retention is £24,500 (£57,000 - £32,500).

Contributions to profit

In calculating both the net replacement cost and the net cost of retention, the estimate of the employee's contributions to future profits is most important. Having estimated the pre-tax profits for a period, the employer should add back wages and salaries. The total is then allocated to departments and within departments to sections, until each employee has a price on his head. The criteria for making these allocations will be mainly concerned with the ability to affect profits by increasing the company's income or decreasing its expenditure. Thus, in a company that markets a consumer product the sales department can expect to have a large share of the responsibility for making profits.

Once the allocation has been made to each employee, the proportion which relates to the period during which the replacement would be catching him up, would be calculated. The wages, employer's contributions to pension, SET, national insurance and other costs of employing him during this period, all of which will have been added back to the pre-tax profits, will have to be deducted from the allocation of profit. It will then be necessary to decide the replacement policy for each employee and evaluate it. In many cases the net replacement cost will be small, e.g., in the case of typists, clerks and most manual workers. Nevertheless, the evaluation should be made, albeit on a mass basis, and the net replacement cost included, to ensure that the total is a true figure that relates to all employees, and not just a selected few.

Accounting treatment

Net replacement cost is a positive value, whereas net cost of retention is a negative value. In the year when the first evaluations are made, the total of the positive values for individual employees will be debited to an asset account called 'Net Value of Employees', after deducting notional corporation tax at the current rate. The same amount will be credited to 'Employee Replacement Reserve'. The total of the negative values of certain individuals, less notional corporation tax at the current rate, will be credited to 'Employee Retention Reserve' and debited in the post-tax section of the profit and loss account.

These adjustments will make no difference to the company's tax computation. The creation of an abstract asset 'net value of employee' will not have to be added into the computation and the deduction from net profits in respect of the 'employee retention reserve' will not be an allowable deduction. The Inland Revenue would rightly claim that it was a reserve and, even if it could be proved that keeping the employee would result in an actual future loss, as opposed to a reduction in profit, they would still argue that it would only be allowable when it is incurred. Therefore, as these adjustments do not affect the company's liability to tax, it is necessary to deduct notional corporation tax at the current rate, in order to arrive at net amounts to be shown in the accounts. In this way the measure of the value of employees is related to their contribution to, or charge on, net profits.

It would be wrong to take account of future profits by crediting the 'net value of employees' to profit and loss account. But future reductions in net profit, due to keeping on an employee who has a negative value, are proper deductions from current profits. As the employee is being retained because of his past service, the cost of his retention is a proper charge against current profits.

In the balance sheet 'net value of employees' would be shown as an asset, from which 'employee retention reserve' would be deducted. The entries would be beneath fixed assets and investments and above current assets. The 'employee replacement reserve' would be shown as a capital reserve, although it need not now be described as such in the published accounts.

Insurance

Companies which insure themselves against the death or serious injury of important employees can use the net replacement cost as the amount for which they should be insured, for this is the company's insurable interest. This is in addition to any life assurance policy which it may have in order to compensate relatives in the event of the employee meeting with some misfortune whilst he is on the company's business. If a claim is made in respect of the net replacement cost, the amount received should be credited to profit and loss account. The fact that the employee will not be included in the subsequent year-end evaluation will mean that the 'net value of employees' and the corresponding 'employee replacement reserve' will be adjusted accordingly.

To enable employee evaluation to be made, it will be necessary to prepare budgets for at least five years ahead, to have a sound knowledge of the labour market and to have tables of life expectations in different jobs. Employee evaluation will attract specialist personnel accountants, who will work for management consultants, practising accountants or personnel agencies, which will make their skills available on a consultative basis. Large companies will employ their own specialists, who will be senior members of the management team. Auditors will have to acquire skills in checking the evaluation to see that they are made in accordance with best modern practice.

The future

Once this new aspect of accounting is introduced, business accounting will take on a new face, for the past will no longer be the only basis on which accounts are prepared. The future will be incorporated into present values. There is nothing inherently wrong with this. Already fixed assets are revalued on bases that assume future profitability. A person who is about to buy a business is more interested in the future than the past. Shareholders, who have already bought their stake in the business, are entitled to have the future prospects of their company quantified in this way. Finally, investment analysts will be able to judge the company's share values much better if the accounts reveal the amounts relating to employees.

Finger-tip Computing

II – Simple Programming

by HAROLD LUCAS, B.Sc.(Econ.), B.Com., A.C.I.S., A.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

THE main intention of these articles is to provide guidance to accountants and managers, who are not computer specialists, in the operation of what may be called finger-tip computing, especially where commercial calculations are involved. Technical problems will not be dealt with in detail nor will the cost appraisal that has, presumably, supported a firm's decision to provide its staff with the necessary facilities. With in-house systems the extra costs to a business which needs a computer in any case in connection with its general data processing may be quite modest, since computer central processors tend to be grossly underloaded.

Some appreciation of how finger-tip systems work is needed, however, so that the best use can be made of them and the cost of the information they provide be kept at a minimum.

Fundamentals

Any computer system consists of two sets of essential hardware:

- (1) A central processing unit (or cpu), which is what is normally understood when the term computer is used. Basically, the computer is a rapid calculator, capable of following logical trains, and it also has a memory, in which instructions and data can be stored. Computers of the digital type, which are our sole concern, break down complicated calculations and sequences into large numbers of very simple elements, called bits, each of which is either on or off, and may be represented by the state of a transistor gate, or by a magnetic field, in the case of computer memory.
- (2) Peripheral devices, which enable information to be put into or taken from the computer, and which also permit information to be stored other than in the computer memory. It is chiefly these devices which the manager sees and which he may operate himself in the case of finger-tip computing.

In the cases we are considering the most popular input and output devices are teleprinters with keyboards similar to those on typewriters, but with some special keys and switches. On these the users type their instructions and data, and back through them is received the information and answers they require. Devices linked to the computer in this way are described as being on-line.

Associated with the teleprinter is often a device for punching and reading paper tape. Information can be typed and the tape punched and corrected beforehand, either on another teleprinter or on the control teleprinter while it is disconnected from the computer. This is the off-line system of data preparation, resulting in less computer time being wasted over errors and in a higher rate of transmission of the data, since this is read automatically from the tape.

Fig. 8 shows how a simple single-program computer is made to function. First it has to be instructed as to how it is to process the data which will be fed to it. These instructions take the form of a program, which must be a perfectly logical statement of all the steps needed from input of data to output of the final results.

This program is input to the memory and will initiate the controls over (a) the input of data, (b) the arithmetic and logical operations to which it is to be subjected, (c) movements of data within the store, and (d) output of processed data, shown by broken lines in the diagram. Data is then input, subjected to a sequence of logical and arithmetic operations, and eventually output. The input and output devices will generally be the same teleprinter in the case of finger-tip computing.

With time-sharing the basic principles are the same but a control device is needed which can accept inputs from perhaps dozens of terminals and can rotate central processor time between them, pulling programs and data from disc or drum backing store and returning them as required. Fig. 9 shows a simplified outline of such an arrangement.

Fig. 9 Simplified Version of a Time-sharing System

As far as the accountant is concerned he can use an existing program or may write or have written for him a program to deal with any problem involving calculation.

Existing programs may be from a library supplied by his firm's programmers, or by a bureau to which his firm subscribes, or by the computer manufacturer, or may be ones the accountant himself has written in the past.

Programming languages

New programs, prepared for special calculations, have to be written – generally, nowadays, in a high-level computer language. Such languages have the characteristics of being usable on different computers, of readability, so that the programs are easy to follow and to modify, and of being straightforward to learn, partly because of their standardized nature.

The only language a computer can understand, however, is a machine code devised for the particular range of computers, which is unintelligible to people who are not experts in programming those computers. To translate from the high-level language to the machine language a translator or compiler is required. This is really a special program for this particular translation job. Unless such a compiler is available for the computer being used then the particular language cannot be employed. This availability of languages is one of the chief things to be considered in selecting a time-sharing system.

One of the first things required when an accountant uses a new program or an established one in a high-level language is to input the appropriate compiler. If outside time-sharing facilities are being used this is generally readily done by an appropriate message incorporating the name of the compiler, which itself will be stored on a disc. The same may apply to terminals linked to an in-house installation of some size and degree of sophistication. With some configurations putting in the compiler may be a lengthy job, perhaps taking some minutes. This would apply to an installation which had paper tape as its chief input medium. In such cases it may be best to standardize on one language or to arrange that work involving different computers is dealt with at pre-arranged periods in the day.

The chief languages suited to and available for fingertip computing are BASIC, FORTRAN and ALGOL, while COBOL and PL I are available on some terminal systems. Other, perhaps lesser-known, languages may also be available.

For calculation purposes FORTRAN is perhaps the best established, though in Britain ALGOL has a considerable following. Modern FORTRAN has been freed from many of the restrictions of format imposed by its original dependence on punched cards for input and output, while ALGOL has never had such restrictions. BASIC has been specially devised for the conversational mode of operation favoured by terminals; it is simple to understand and learn and capable of handling any calculations the accountant is likely to wish to program himself. It is not too much to suppose that most staff in a few years will have been trained in such a language as part of their educational background.

Examples of basic programs

We shall end the present article by considering two examples of programming in BASIC. The flowcharts are shown in Figs. 10 and 12, and the related programs in Figs. 11 and 13.

The first example relates to a fundamental type of program to calculate the average of any number of positive numbers. The flowchart indicates the sequence to be followed by the computer. First the locations for S (the sum) and N (the number of items or count) are made equal to zero. This is needed in all programs where totals are to be accumulated. The next instruction is to read a number and call this X. At the end of the list of numbers will be a negative number which acts as an end marker. If X is not negative it is added to S; at the same time N is increased by 1. The next number is then read in by the loop. At each stage S will represent the total of numbers and N the count of the numbers. When the negative end marker arises the program branches to the left and the average is calculated by dividing S by N. The required print-out is then arranged and the program ends.

The numbers alongside the sections of the flowchart refer to the line numbers of the BASIC program of Fig. 11.

Fig. 13 Basic Program and Print-out for Flowchart (Fig. 12)

Both programs were devised for demonstration purposes and run on a terminal linked with GEIS, one of the many firms providing such services.

The first line shows the name (AVCALC) given to the program by the writer, the time the program was run (13.11 or 1.11 p.m.), and the date (April 16th, 1970).

The program, as typed at the terminal, follows. Each line is numbered, in this case in tens, to leave room for the insertion of new lines, if these are subsequently found to be needed. With this compiler the sequence of the program follows that of the line numbers. A line containing an error may be amended by typing the same line number at some later stage, when this will be substituted for the original line. New lines may be similarly inserted.

It is easy to make sense of this program and to relate it to the flowchart. The following points may be of interest to those who are thinking of using BASIC:

- (a) Lines beginning with REMARK are ignored by the computer and can be used for comments to make the program more intelligible to a person.
- (b) Calculations, one per line, start with the word LET. The operators are + (plus), - (minus), * (multiplication), / (division) and  or ↑ (exponentiation), with parentheses to control the order of operation. Thus, the statement LET A = P(1+R/100) ↑ N gives the formula for the amount of a principal invested for N years at R per cent compound interest.
- (c) Variables, such as S and N, used by the programmer and given a meaning by him, consist of a single letter or a single letter followed by a numeral. Combinations such as AV and COUNT are not permitted.
- (d) There is no need to 'declare' variables before they are used; new ones can be brought in as required by the program.
- (e) Arrays, where there are a number of, say, X values, can be handled by placing the number of the particular item required in parentheses. This is shown in Fig. 13, where we read in first the value N, the first item in the DATA line, which is 10. This, in conjunction with line 40, implies that there are 10 locations for X. The READ statement READ X (I) pulls in each value in turn, so that, when I=1 the value of the first X is 15.6, when I=2 the value of the second X is 17.2, and so on.
- (f) Decisions, involving relational operators, such as < (less than), > (greater than), and = (equal) are handled as in line 50, where THEN 90 diverts the program to line 90 if X is less than zero (negative).
- (g) PRINT instructions are followed by any characters required in quotes, or by the variables whose values are to be printed. In Fig. 11 advantage had been taken of the fact that there is no need to calculate the average separately, as in the flowchart; if it is only required to print out this value it can be handled as in line 110.

- (h) Any data required by the program is input after the word DATA.

With regard to the program shown in Fig. 13 it is best to follow this through first from the flowchart of Fig. 12.

The stages are:

- (a) Read in the number of items (N or 10 in this example) and then read in each item, allocating it to its X position, until the last item has been reached.
- (b) Go through the items, picking out the smallest (A) and the largest (B). This is done by setting A and B initially equal to the first number. From the second number (1=2) onwards, if a number is less than the existing value of A it is substituted for it, while, if it is greater than the existing B value, it is substituted for that.
- (c) At the end the values of A and B are printed out, as minimum and maximum respectively, and the difference as the range.

- (d) Instead of increasing I by 1 each time, as shown in the flowchart, this is done by a statement FOR I=1 TO N followed by the statements to be performed and ending with the statement NEXT I, as in lines 30 to 50 and 80 to 140.

BASIC programming, in its simplest form, is very easy to learn. A person of reasonable intelligence, with no previous programming experience, can write and understand simple programs in an hour or so. This should not be confused with full flowcharting and programming skill, which only comes with considerable practice. The two examples just quoted would probably be used as parts of a more complicated series of calculations.

The next article will consider the problems of linking terminals with computers situated at a distance and give examples of package programs.

Gifts: Presumption of Undue Influence

THE testator, C, had inherited a substantial sum on the death of his wife in 1958, and at that time was worth some £40,000. C died in August 1964, his estate having by then fallen to £9,500. During the period of approximately four and a half years preceding his death, he had made gifts to a total of approximately £28,000, including £7,950 for the purchase of a house, to Mrs M who had acted as his secretary and companion since his wife's death. The residuary legatees of C's estate brought an action claiming that the gifts to Mrs M were void for undue influence and should be set aside.

In the Chancery Division, Ungood-Thomas, J, held that to establish a presumption of undue influence there must be proved (1) a gift so substantial or of such a nature as cannot be reasonably accounted for on the grounds of ordinary motives, and (2) a relationship between the donor and the recipient in which the donor has such confidence and trust in the recipient as to place the latter in a position to exercise undue influence over the donor.

There was no direct evidence of pressure being specifically brought by Mrs M to produce any particular gift by C. There was, however, direct evidence of pressure on other occasions by Mrs M to have her own way, and having regard also to C's advanced years and general state of health and his utter dependence upon Mrs M, the Court held that the presumption of undue influence which had been raised had not been discharged. The gifts to Mrs M would therefore be set aside.

National Insurance Acts: 'Just Cause'

A CLAIMANT who voluntarily leaves his employment without just cause may be disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit, under section 22 (2) (a) of the National Insurance Act 1965.

C, a police inspector, voluntarily retired from the force on completing 30 years' service, having qualified for a maximum police pension of two-thirds of his average pensionable pay. Had he remained in the force, his service would have become financially less advantageous in that (a) he could not qualify for an improved pension unless he received an increase in pay which would affect the 'average' figure, and (b) the right to commute 25 per cent of his pension for a lump sum would be lost in the event of his dying in service. There was evidence that this commutation right was valued by police officers as their only substantial chance of accumulating a capital sum.

In anticipation of his retirement, C made several unsuccessful attempts to find alternative employment: on one occasion, a prospective employer declined to keep the job open when C was unable, by reason of his police duties, to keep an appointment for interview. He concluded that he was unlikely to obtain a firm offer whilst still a serving police officer, and accordingly tendered his resignation from the force with effect from July 1st. Subsequently he was offered employment which commenced on September 1st, so that for the intervening two months he was unemployed. The local national insurance officer ruled that C had voluntarily left the police force without just cause, and disqualified him from benefit under section 22 (2) (a) for the maximum period of six weeks. C appealed from this decision, firstly to a local tribunal (which upheld the original ruling) and then to the Commissioner (Mr R. S. Lazarus). It was stated that similar appeals were pending in seven other cases.

Before the Commissioner, C argued that, after completion of 30 years in the force, his conditions of service became materially disadvantageous so as to constitute in effect a new contract; or alternatively, that the deterioration in conditions gave him 'just cause' for leaving. He was influenced by the need to make proper provision for his wife, and to obtain the commutation sum in order to discharge a bank loan incurred for the purchase of a house; and he also considered that at his age (51) his best chance of obtaining employment outside the force lay in retiring as soon as he had qualified for the maximum police pension.

The Commissioner held that a police officer's contract of service did not terminate after 30 years, and that he did not have 'just cause' for leaving the force merely because the terms thereafter became less favourable. The case was a borderline one, but C had failed 'by a narrow margin' to show just cause for leaving the force when he did. Nevertheless, the factors which C had to take into consideration were somewhat finely balanced, and he had made determined efforts to find other employment. The imposition of the maximum penalty was not appropriate to the circumstances, and the period of disqualification from benefit would therefore be reduced to three weeks only.

Inheritance (Family Provision) Act

THE testator, G, married his wife in 1916, and in 1926 deserted her and the daughter of their marriage. The wife and daughter went to live with her mother, and received no support from G.

In 1950, G asked his wife to return, but she refused because of the need to look after her mother. Shortly afterwards, her mother died and G sent his wife £100, so that she might visit her daughter who was by then living in America. In 1955 the wife and daughter took up permanent residence in Chile.

G made several wills between 1959 and 1966, four of which included legacies to his wife. However, in his final will (made on October 31st, 1966), he left her nothing, and he told his solicitor that she had lost all interest in him. He died on September 1st, 1968, leaving an estate of some £2,800, and his widow applied to the Court for reasonable provision out of that estate.

The Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of the Swindon County Court, dismissed the application. In the first place, the judge of first instance was entrusted with a discretion, and an appellate court should not lightly interfere with that discretion. Secondly, the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act 1938 was an invasion of the freedom of testamentary disposition and should be invoked sparingly. Thirdly, applications against small estates were to be discouraged. In all the circumstances, it could not be said that the judge had exercised his discretion other than correctly.

Domestic Tribunal: Deficiency of Natural Justice

UNDER the rules of a trade union, a member whose contributions were more than 26 weeks in arrears might be excluded from membership by the branch committee. L was a member and full-time official of the union, and was alleged (though this was disputed) to be thus in arrears. A branch meeting of the union purported to expel him from membership, and this decision was adopted by the branch committee. The national executive committee subsequently endorsed the decision.

These proceedings were insupportable on several grounds. Firstly, there was a serious deficiency of natural justice in that L was not notified of the complaint against him, nor was he given notice of either the branch or the branch committee meeting; secondly, the branch meeting, as opposed to the committee, had no powers of expulsion under the rules; thirdly, at the committee meeting a person who had been irregularly 'nominated' in place of an indisposed committee member attended and took an active part in the proceedings.

L finally appeared before the union's appeals council, where in the course of a hearing extending over two days he was given 'a most ample opportunity' to present his case, and at which witnesses were heard and cross-examined. The appeals council upheld his expulsion. He then applied to the Court for injunctions restraining the union (a) from enforcing his expulsion, and (b) from dismissing him from his appointment as a full-time official. The union contended that the admitted initial irregularities in his expulsion had been remedied by a sufficiency of natural justice in the appellate tribunal.

In the Chancery Division, Megarry, J, rejected that contention. The proper course where a deficiency of natural justice has occurred is for the body to which jurisdiction is confided to hear the matter de novo. To consign it to some appellate tribunal means that the aggrieved party bears the onus of displacing an adverse decision which, for lack of natural justice, ought never to have been reached. If a man has never had a fair trial before the appropriate body [in this case, the branch committee], it is not open to the appellate tribunal to abandon its own appellate functions and to act as a court of first instance, thus in effect denying him his right of appeal.

Whilst holding L's expulsion to have been void, the Court granted only the first of the injunctions claimed, the second being akin to the specific performance of a contract of service.

Hanstead Investments Ltd v. CIR

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
June 29th, 1970

(Before Mr Justice STAMP)

Surtax – Company's undistributed income – Directors' statutory declaration – Whether by present or former directors – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 210, 250, 251.

The Special Commissioners, under section 250 of the Income Tax Act 1952, served a notice on the company requiring it to furnish particulars of its actual income for the accounting period ended April 30th, 1962; and under section 251 a statutory declaration was sent by the company to the Special Commissioners. The declaration was made by the then directors. The persons who were directors at the time relevant to the accounting period had ceased to be directors before the Special Commissioners' notice was given.

It was contended for the company that the consequent direction and assessments were ultra vires, because the statutory declaration had not been made by those who were the directors at the relevant time. It was contended for the Revenue that as the declaration had been made by those who were the directors when it was made, the declaration was validly made.

Held: the Revenue's contention was correct.

Schioler v. Westminster Bank Limited

In the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division) –
May 27th, 1970

(Before Mr Justice MOCATTA)

Income tax – Dividend in foreign Currency – UK resident with foreign domicile – Account in Guernsey – Dividend warrant sent for credit there – Sent to UK for realization – Customer not consulted – UK tax deducted – Whether bank negligent – Bills of Exchange Act 1882, section 82 – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 132, 189 (b), 190 – Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (Malaysia) Order 1967 (No. 1925).

In 1962 the plaintiff, who was resident in England but domiciled in Denmark, opened an account with the bank's Guernsey branch. She received dividends from a company in Malaysia, and until 1967 the warrants were in sterling and were sent by the company to her account in Guernsey. In 1968 the company converted its shares from pounds to Malaysian dollars, and on June 15th, 1968, the company sent to the Guernsey branch for the account of the plaintiff a dividend warrant for 17,848.80 Malaysian dollars, after deduction of Malaysian income tax. As there were no facilities in Guernsey for negotiating drafts in foreign currencies, the warrant was sent to the bank's stock office in Crawley, in accordance with the bank's normal practice for realization, and United Kingdom income tax was deducted. The sterling thus realized was £2,412 7s 6d, and the income tax deducted was £955 2s 1d, and the plaintiff's Guernsey account was credited with £1,417 5s 5d.

The plaintiff claimed damages in the sum of £995 2s 1d for breach of contract. The bank denied liability, and also contended that the plaintiff should have mitigated her damages, if any, by obtaining double taxation relief under the Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (Malaysia) Order 1967.

Held: in the absence of express instructions the bank was not liable. The question of double taxation relief was adjourned.

In re Vandervell's Trusts Ltd

In the House of Lords – July 15th, 1970

(Before Lord REID, Lord MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST, Viscount DILHORNE, Lord WILBERFORCE and Lord DIPLOCK)

Surtax – Claim by executors against trustee – Possible tax consequences – Interest of executors and Inland Revenue identical – Whether Inland Revenue to be joined as defendants – Income Tax Act 1952, section 415 – Rules of Supreme Court, Order 15, Rule 6 (2) (b).

The settlor, who died on March 10th, 1967, had transferred 100,000 shares in Vandervell Products Ltd, a company which he controlled, to the Royal College of Surgeons, which had on the other hand granted an option to Vandervell Trustees Ltd, the trustee of the settlement, to purchase the shares for £5,000. This option had been duly exercised.

The settlor was assessed to surtax on the dividends paid to the Royal College of Surgeons on the footing that there had been a settlement of property, of which the settlor had not absolutely divested himself; and that accordingly the settlement was caught by section 415 of the Income Tax Act 1952. The assessment was upheld by the House of Lords: Vandervell v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

In respect of the period between the date of the exercise of the option and January 19th, 1965, the trustee received dividends on the shares amounting to £769,580 net. By a deed of the last-mentioned date, which was executed for the resolution of doubts whether the settlor had divested himself of all interest in the shares, he assigned and released to the trustee all such right, title or interest, if any, as he might have to or in the option or the shares, dividends or income, in favour of the trustees of a settlement he had made in 1949 on his children.

In May 1968, the executors took out an originating summons for an order that the trustee should pay them the net amount of the dividends after deducting the £5,000. In the following October the Master made an order, on the application of the executors, for the addition of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue as defendants. The trustee appealed against that order, which had been made under Order 15, Rule 6 (2) (b).

Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal): the Inland Revenue could not be joined as a party.

Ahead of the Law

Definition and Treatment of Associated Companies

THERE are many stages and processes through which changes in practice and usage go before they are given the accolade of recognition in law. If company law were to be left to Companies Acts at intervals of 20 years with no development in the intervening periods, the accountant's work might possibly be a shade simpler than it is – or should it be a shade less involved than it is?

But law by 20-year upheaval would be ridiculous. It is only when company law at 20-year intervals consolidates what has been achieved in terms of enlightenment, example, recommendation and general professional acceptance that the law begins to make sense. The law has to be given room to make an ass of itself now and again, such as in one or two parts of the 1967 Act, but when new company law comes round there is always a handful of companies which have to do practically nothing at all to comply with it and a very considerable number of companies which merely have to make marginal changes.

In fact the English Institute's recently issued exposure draft on the definition and treatment of the results of associated companies in company accounts shows how this process works – because the proposed recommendation contains nothing outrageously new to enlightened companies. Like Boosey & Hawkes, for example, whose accounts form this week's reprint.

Joint venture

The Boosey & Hawkes profit and loss account opens, it will be seen, with 'Group and joint venture turnover' and moves on to separate disclosure of trading and joint venture profit at trading level and combined group and joint venture profits. The definition of group and joint venture turnover is provided in Note 'A' to the profit and loss account. At this point may this column compliment Boosey & Hawkes on lettering the keyed notes to the profit and loss account and numbering the notes to the balance sheets.

The reader of the profit and loss account will immediately want to know what this 'joint venture' business is all about and he finds the explanation in the directors' report. There it is stated in the first paragraph of the report that: 'The directors are of the opinion that operations conducted within the group as joint ventures, being on an equal partnership basis with the Hammond Organ Co of Chicago are an integral part of the group's business particularly as the group acts as comptrollers and/or managers of such businesses. For this reason the consolidated profit and loss account reflects these activities and the consolidated balance sheet includes the Boosey & Hawkes group's 50 per cent share of the undistributed reserves and its investments in these companies.'

The Boosey & Hawkes accounts are therefore an example of a company voluntarily providing information which is the subject of the draft recommendation currently being debated, and which may in due course become accepted practice and ultimately the law.

Major name

Boosey & Hawkes is a major name in music – in music publication, and in musical instrument manufacture and distribution. There are overseas subsidiaries – mainly 100 per cent owned – in Australia, Canada, France, Germany, South Africa, Sweden, and the United States, from whence comes the biggest single shareholder in the company, Carl Fischer Inc., with 1,288,275 ordinary shares.

The results shown in the accounts for 1969 were a record for the company and it would have been interesting to know the split of earnings between music sales and the sales of musical instruments. Mr Kenneth Pool, the chairman, says that the music sales division 'had a satisfactory year with substantial increases in both home and export sales', and the 'upward trend is continuing'. In musical instruments, new sales records were achieved and the company's instrument sales director, Mr Dennis Gillard, was awarded the OBE in the New Year Honours 'for services to export'. Exports are put at £1,200,000 for the year compared with £960,000 in 1968 and, additionally, the UK companies produced substantial invisible exports in the form of copyright fees and royalties.

Here again the split between visibles and invisibles, or rather a figure for the company's invisible export earnings, would have been of particular interest.

Nominal copyrights

The copyrights on which the achievement of earnings, including invisible exports, are based are included in the balance sheet at the nominal amount of £1. As the directors' report points out, the copyrights are 'intrinsic to the group's music publishing activities'. But their market value, which is material, could not be ascertained with any degree of accuracy 'unless they were offered for sale'.

It is interesting to note the extent to which the accountancy profession is represented on the Boosey & Hawkes' board. Mr Kenneth P. Pool, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., is chairman, Mr Alan T. Clapham, F.C.A., is one of the joint managing directors, and another director is Mr John S. Little,

A.A.C.C.A., F.C.I.S. The accountancy of one joint managing director is, however, balanced by the musicianship of the other — Mr David S. Adams, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M. The three other directors are Mr Ernest Roth, LL.D., deputy chairman, Mr Christopher G. S. Saunders, M.A., and Mr Dennis P. Gillard, O.B.E., the recognition of whose services in the export field has already been noted.

With the profession so well represented it is not surprising to find the Boosey & Hawkes accounts anticipating the Institute's recommendation and being presented with clarity.

No Forecast

THE frightening business routine of Mr S. T. Ryder has been reported at length in various sections of the press — up before dawn has cracked, in the office (only a brisk walk away) at some unbelievable hour, and still in it at an equally unbelievable hour at night, and the apparent ability to run Reed Group plus International Publishing Corporation on his own. Clearly Mr Ryder is blessed with a constitution not given to all men.

It almost comes as a surprise to see in the Reed Group 1969-70 report that there are, in fact, nine other people on the Reed board, three of them being deputy chairmen. Mr Ryder, it goes without saying, is listed as chairman and chief executive, and apparently three deputies are needed for chairman but no deputy as chief executive.

But taking the metaphorical tongue from the cheek, the notice of readers of this column, and particularly of those in high company office, needs to be directed to one sentence in Mr Ryder's statement with the Reed Group report. The sentence is: 'It is my habit not to make forecasts, but rather to produce results, and to communicate those results regularly and quickly to you each quarter.'

Prompt, regular reporting does away with the need to forecast and rescues company chairmen from the dread of that perilous exercise.

29 per cent retail trading and 29 per cent textiles in the shape of lace and net manufacturing and 'others'. In terms of trading profit of £550,000, however, the first section provided £418,000 of profit and the third £316,000, with the second showing a loss of £184,000.

The group has been in the throes of reorganization for a number of years and a new chairman, Mr R. A. Palfreyman, B.SC.(ECON.), F.C.A., appointed last October, has to report that in an effort to remedy disappointing results in the retail and lace and nets parts of the business there has been 'a lot of re-grouping of activities' as well as some management changes.

The chairman covers the familiar ground of unprofitable companies being disposed of or closed down. Selincourt shareholders have read this kind of thing so many times that some of them may wonder just how many more companies there are to close down.

But in a group which has been continuously in a state of reorganization for years it is hardly surprising to see an item of as much as £489,000 written off against reserves 'in respect of exceptional items relating to earlier years'. The new chairman comments that it is evident that the optimism of prior years had led to a policy of stock valuation in anticipation of sales which, in the event, proved difficult to obtain.

Tidying up

'Such a policy inevitably brings losses', the chairman says, and adds, 'I therefore decided to provide fully for them in the accounts'. Most of the amount written off results from stock adjustments, though other items have also been included under that heading 'in a general tidying up of accountancy procedures'.

Arising from the high level of stock, there has been continual pressure on group liquidity and particular emphasis, Mr Palfreyman tells shareholders, is being applied to the conversion of much of the group's stock into cash. At the time of reporting, the stock levels had been further reduced and firm plans for additional reduction are being put into operation.

At the end of January stocks were £5,369,000 compared with £5,883,000 in January 1969.

Although the information that the report and accounts gives shareholders is not particularly encouraging - net earnings down from £447,000 to £156,000 - the Selincourt accounts are well and originally presented, use being made of double-flap opening pages. But why it was necessary to use three different paper colours this column would not pretend to know.

The balance sheets are set on one page to one of narrative – a right-hand page – the profit and loss account being on the reverse side. Had the positions been reversed, reading the accounts with the attendant notes would have been made easier.

Just how poor the Selincourt performance has been is shown in the 10-year table: pre-tax profits of £735,000 on employed capital of £4,511,000 in 1961, but only £352,000 on £10,041,000 in the past year.

'Tight Money' Balance Sheet

RELATIVELY heavy capital investment during a tight money period is reflected in the group balance sheet of Card Clothing & Belting Ltd. Net additions to land and buildings in the past two years totalled £91,023, and new plant and machinery and equipment a further £111,928. The bulk of this expenditure of £202,951 was on new works and on works extensions. No new permanent capital was raised.

The chairman, Mr G. W. M. O'Shea, says that one consequence is evident in the reduction of net quick assets from £1,017,535 to £907,003. At the end of March last year, net bank balances were £107,876 but at March 31st, last, net overdrafts totalled £138,076 or as Mr O'Shea puts it, 'a swing of £245,952'.

On top of this, stocks and debtors were together some £237,000 higher over the same period. 'Our balance sheet', the chairman says, 'may be said to reflect very clearly the tight monetary conditions ruling today'. In particular, it exemplifies the problems that arise when a company wishes to embark on capital investment in excess of its own cash flow. The punitive level of corporate taxation is the principal cause and this is aggravated by the daunting level of interest rates.

The consolation is that Mr O'Shea is able to report on a year of further general improvement in trading experience. Turnover and profits improved, and direct export sales rose 36 per cent to £513,000 – an important development since the company is currently able to maintain profit margins abroad by price adjustments.

CITY NOTES

DESPITE an institutional reluctance to anticipate the beginnings of a new bull market in equities, the stock-market looks a more confident place. Settlement of the dock strike, a patched-up armistice in the Middle East and the hope that the price rise spiral may be losing some of its viciousness have combined to inject a better degree of confidence into the equity market.

Most managers of institutional funds, however, are still backing direct property investment and the gilt-edged market as the safest bets in the current investment stakes, and the yield and capital protection offered by both admittedly look useful. Not, presumably, until the institutions, by their investment, have themselves diluted the property and gilt edged market's attractions will funds be switched proportionately to equities.

Admittedly there is barely a company whose chairman, board, or management is currently prepared to make a firm forecast of short-term results. 'Our confidence in the long term remains strong' is the boardroom equivalent of 'It must be right to buy equities on a five-year basis now'.

Both are easily said. Neither is readily detailed or quantified. But those who 'feel' the market insist that it feels more confident now than at any time since the change in government.

THE current level of stock-market business is not by any manner of means creating pressure on the market machinery. But even short memory can recall 1968 and early 1969 when the paper work required much burning of midnight oil, and when the London market was getting uncomfortably close to the Wall Street point of having to close for a day or so to allow an administrative catching up operation to be launched.

Because paper work is currently up to date (with the exception of Australian registrations) there may be a tendency to consider recent proposals for change unnecessary. But the proposals put forward by the City Working Party under Mr R. E. Heasman, of the Bank of England, are likely to be seriously debated.

A rolling ten-day settlement cycle instead of the present fortnightly account operation, which entails bunching of activity, is one revolutionary proposal, and the settlement of business through deliveries to and from a pool of stock representing jobbers' holdings is another.

Standardization of documents at all stages is a long-overdue reform which is also suggested under proposals designed to cut security transfer paper work in half.

Although the current volume of business may make some Stock Exchange firms consider system streamlining unnecessary, the current level of costs is another matter. The prospect of a 50 per cent reduction in paper work is tantalizingly attractive under present conditions of steeply rising office costs.

An official Stock Exchange decision on the proposals is expected before the end of this year. It will be surprising if the 18 months' labour of the Heasman Working Party is entirely wasted.

* * * *

THE 'Big Four' Banks have now reported on their half-year operations, but the subject of the trend of bank profits has been overtaken by official concern about the trend of bank advances. A strong expansion in advances in June-July brought a reminder from the Bank of England that the banks had undertaken last April to keep their increase in lending to 5 per cent by the end of the current fiscal year.

But already the rise is of the order of 4 per cent, hence the Bank of England's warning letter. The fact that the Bank thought it necessary to issue the warning seems to be one more indication that, although the new Government's policy may be to achieve economic strength by expansion rather than by restriction, there is at present no hurry to put that policy into operation.

Next spring rather than this autumn looks like expansion time, despite the strengthening view that already the expansion moves have been left too late.

Letters

The Integration Proposals

From the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

SIR, — Proxy cards have to be returned to the scrutineers by 11 a.m. on Wednesday, August 12th, 1970.

At the time of writing this letter, I am distressed to learn that over 50 per cent of the membership of our Institute has not taken the trouble to return a proxy form on a matter which is so vital to the future of the profession and on which I believe it is the duty of every member to express an opinion.

May I, through your columns, make a final appeal to every member who has not expressed a view, to complete a proxy form and return it to the scrutineers immediately.

Yours faithfully,

C. CROXTON-SMITH,
President,

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES.

Chartered Accountants' Hall, Moorgate Place, London EC2.

SIR, — The letters which have appeared regarding integration have almost all been interesting; although some have presented arguments against integration which may only be regarded as astonishing.

It must be granted that, formerly, the name 'chartered accountant' did have a special significance; this cannot be denied. At present, however, perhaps because of the extent of high-level infiltration into commerce and industry, notably by cost and works accountants and certified accountants, many businessmen are undoubtedly confused by the variety of appellations. Consequently, when seeking financial directors, company secretaries, works accountants, etc., many do not short-list chartered accountants for these vacancies, regarding their experience as being more suitable for auditing than for the practicalities of business advising and administration. There is a lesson to be learned here.

Unity really is strength and one can only hope that this truth will finally be acknowledged so that the present 'disintegration' of what we are pleased to call our profession may finally be succeeded by one firmly based, integrated, and generally accepted and recognized body.

If common sense does not prevail, however, and the scheme is rejected, it will be the self-styled accountants, holders of business diplomas or management executive graduates who will be laughing on the sidelines. And, as they have already greatly benefited by our inability to consolidate our standing, who would blame them?

Yours faithfully,

PATIENT.

SIR, — In all the welter of words on the subject of the proposed integration scheme, nothing has been said about its effect on the level of professional fees and salaries. Surely this, in the long term, is the most important aspect of the whole matter and one in which the Council of the Institute appears to take very little interest.

If the scheme is approved, the 'new' chartered accountants may well seek to expand their practices by keeping their fees below the usual level of the 'old' chartered accountants. Although there are no scale fees, as in other professions requiring comparable training and ability, the Council has ruled that chartered accountants are not to obtain business by quoting lower fees than their competitors (see Members' Handbook E 2). Apart from the impracticability and doubtful legality of this ruling, what is the recently qualified accountant who wishes to practise to do? He cannot advertise for business; he cannot compete on price; the brass plate outside his door does not provide him with a living; consequently he is forced to seek employment. Unless he has capital to purchase a practice, his prospects are poor.

This is not the way to attract able new entrants into the profession, nor to ensure its future.

Yours faithfully,

London SW1.

H. I. LANGFORD, F.C.A.

SIR, — As this is likely to be the last opportunity on which I shall be able to say a word to my professional brethren before the fateful Polling Day, I am troubling you with a further letter, directed largely to comments made at the Albert Hall meeting on June 24th.

The discussion has to some extent been bedevilled by the use of emotive expressions of which two are presently in my mind. First, there is the word 'dilution' and, secondly, the word 'isolationism'.

Mr Stanley Dixon defined 'dilution' as 'mixing something that is weaker, with something that is stronger'. The point really is that the scheme aims to mix things which do not mix any more than oil and water. This 'emulsion' will separate out into its component parts once again.

Upon the issue of training, which to my mind is crucial to the whole of these proposals, Mr Dixon again was good enough to say 'I am convinced, because we have had discussions with ICI and Unilever, that if you were to ask these same questions of those people today you would get very different answers'.

Is it not, perhaps, cogent to inquire why, as appears, the questions were not put and the new answers quoted?

Upon the question of confusion in the public mind, I am indebted to Mr Dixon who says: 'We [in industry] shall go behind that and find out what sort of experience a man has had, what sort of man he is.' In brief, the public may be misled but industrialists will not.

Finally, I would implore my professional brethren not to be misled by the publication of matter tending to prejudice their consideration of the subject. To couple a table of other bodies which have voted in favour with a request to vote is really an attempt at prejudice. I am, therefore, the more impelled to add my own feeble voice to those who say 'vote', but adding one word 'against'.

Yours faithfully,

London EC2.

H. O. H. COULSON.

SIR, - Yet again in the post another circular from Messrs Nicholson and Sutherland. Surely we know by now that they have nothing to say except on the question of dilution of standards.

In the same post, however, a circular from the Institute referred to the fact that large numbers of chartered accountants were incapable of preparing an audit report under the new Friendly Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1968.

What have we to dilute?

Yours faithfully,

Burnham-on-Sea.

L. S. A. TRUMAN, F.C.A.

SIR, - Though being badly placed geographically to comment on the future plans of the Institute, I would like to make a few comments which might be seen by some to be irrelevant, but which to me seem highly necessary to be stated.

1. A comment in a journal on a recent highly-publicized voluntary bankruptcy: 'The accounting profession as a whole contributed to the debacle by making acceptable practices that are an open invitation to distortions and outright fraud'. Again, 'Thanks to some unique book-keeping . . . was able to report remarkable profits . . . received more than $600,000 . . . for accounting services last year. Although . . . told its shareholders that it earned $4,400,000 before extraordinary items in 1969, it actually suffered a NORMAL loss of $95 million and it may have lost as much as $120 million'.

My point is that with the current trend to ever-greater companies, the present troubles in training staff adequately, whereby they might go out in a fit state of grace to actually understand the workings of the companies they audit, is highly unlikely. It has been my experience that juniors (qualified) do the field work where the digging is valuable; the seniors merely correct obvious lacunas but never get to the base, being occupied for long hours in amending the language in reports, not the content.

The chartered accountant is respected in commerce by his old reputation and more so by the efforts of chartered accountants in commerce. That all 90,000 of the suggested end-result of integration could even start to do a major job is unlikely. To ruin the status of all is unlikely to help anybody. In the case quoted above, the result was to have a multitude of hearings, investigations and suits.

To those who follow me still, my point is that actions on pooling, and other topics to come, only show how current accepted accounting is such that with a sufficiently large company any result can be obtained, as all know. It therefore seems a poor time to clean house when admitting as members gentlemen who have never had such dealings. That the public become disabused with professional accountants at the time the Institute states the level of education of current members is too low, seems un-Confucius-like.

2. A small but highly-interesting fact is the firms that have got on to the management consultant bandwagon - the future hope of a strangely beset profession - have, as leaders, firms who claim loudly not to be staffed by mere accountants: that the office training here again is inadequate.

3. Your correspondents have made mention of the outlook for acceptance of chartered accountants abroad, but have put a highly optimistic light on actual facts: in many countries pooling of diplomas is negative.

This screed is to state that I am against integration.

Yours very truly,

OVERSEA, F.C.A.

Auditors' Responsibilities

SIR, - There are so many courses on this and that, so much controversy on the best way to present accounts, so much written about integration and general education, that we chartered accountants seem to be in some danger of confusing the details of auditing with fundamental principles - e.g., the reason for the appointment of auditors under the Companies Acts. We are in danger of forgetting what made the Institute strong, namely, the independent and forthright character of its members in regard to auditing. The auditor was the shareholders' watchdog, but nowadays in many cases his other preoccupations (tax consultancy, computer, or management adviser) have claimed so much of his attention that he has forgotten how to bark even, let alone bite.

It is, we all know, the duty of directors to lay before shareholders a balance sheet and profit and loss account showing a true and fair view of the company's affairs. There is no discretionary power available to them to do otherwise. The Acts require the auditors to state whether those accounts in their opinion, do that. As I understand it, if the auditors can express that opinion, they must do so; but if they have not received sufficient information on which to form that opinion, or if they are of the opinion that the directors' accounts as they stand do not show a true and fair view and the amount at issue is substantial, they should in direct and forthright terms say so in their report.

In practice, more often than not, they make a reservation and say 'Subject to this reservation the accounts show a true and fair view'. The Acts do not authorize them to do this, and this wording confuses the 'lay' shareholder. I suggest that auditors should eschew the words 'true and fair' in all cases where they make a reservation.

The Council's recommendations could, I think, be summarized in the following terms:

'It is the auditor's duty to exercise his judgement independently and to express his opinion in clear and unmistakeable terms which leave the reader in no doubt as to the amount involved in any reservation he makes. This obligation is inescapable and is not satisfied by a reference to some note by the directors which is vague, obscure, or set out in some way that the average shareholder cannot understand or evaluate. This applies equally to the affairs of a subsidiary whose accounts are "consolidated" just as much as to the parent itself, because the whole accounts can be no better than the sum of the constituent parts.'

Auditors should remember that some resentment against directors will rub off against them if they are not a little more careful.

Yours faithfully,

Goring-by-Sea, Sussex.

STAMP DUTY

End of 10s Deed Stamp

Accountants are reminded that, as from August 1st, a company's memorandum or articles of association delivered to the Registrar of Companies is not required to be stamped with a 10s deed stamp. The abolition of this duty is provided for in section 32 (a) and paragraph 1 (2) (d) of Schedule 7 of the Finance Act 1970.

Abolition of 6d Stamp Duty

The 6d stamp duty on agreements (including hire-purchase and credit sale agreements) is also abolished for documents executed after August 1st. Exemption from the stamp duty extends, inter alia, to: investment grant claims; undertakings regarding the future use of grant-aided assets, and claims for further or higher education grants.

Receipt Stamps

The abolition of the 2d stamp on receipts and on bills of exchange and promissory notes will take effect on February 1st, 1971.

P. D. LEAKE RESEARCH FELLOW

Mr K. V. Peasnell, M.Sc., A.C.A., D.B.S., has been appointed P. D. Leake Research Fellow in the Department of Financial Control, School of Business Organizational Studies, University of Lancaster.

Mr Peasnell took up his two-year fellowship on August 1st, and will conduct research leading to published findings on the subject of 'The uses of, needs for, and form of published information regarding company financial affairs'. The research will involve original field research among users and providers of financial information, together with extensive literature searches, international comparisons, and the postulation of feasible standards and forms of information disclosure.

After serving his articles with Melman, Pryke & Co, of London, Mr Peasnell obtained the Postgraduate Diploma in Business Studies at

CHAIR IN ACCOUNTANCY

Mr Michael Bromwich, B.Sc.(ECON.), A.C.W.A., has been appointed the Julian S. Hodge Professor of Accountancy at the University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology.

At present lecturer in accountancy at the London School of Economics and Warden of Carr Saunders Hall, Mr Bromwich has an industrial background and was sponsored by the Ford Motor Company in his degree studies at LSE where he graduated in 1965 with first-class honours, specializing in industry and trade. He has written various works on international trade, costing and capital budgeting.

It is anticipated that the professorship will commence on October 1st and that Mr Bromwich will become Head of the new Department of Business Administration and Accountancy in December.

SCOTTISH INSTITUTE'S POST-QUALIFYING COURSE

Discounted cash-flow and capital budgeting are the subjects of a post-qualifying education course to be held in August and September in two parts by The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland.

Part I will take place at the Great Western Royal Hotel, London, on August 21st, and the North British Hotel, Edinburgh, on September 4th. Appreciation of the theoretical justification for new techniques of financial appraisal is to be aided by illustrations of potential applications for financial management. Part II will be held at the same venues but on September 4th in London and September 11th in Edinburgh, when the subjects are to be considered in greater depth.

Speakers will be Professor J. R. Small, B.Sc.(ECON.), F.C.W.A., F.A.C.C.A., J.DIP.M.A., and Mrs T. V. Ryder Runtun, M.A.(CANTAB.), but although it is predominantly a lecture course, a significant proportion of available time is to be devoted to case studies of particular interest to those whose job it is to examine alternative investment policies. Attendance is open to anyone who is interested in the subject-matter, even if they are non-accountants.

Fees for each part of the course, including documentation, coffee, lunch and tea, are £12 in London and £10 in Edinburgh, and applications to attend should be made to the Director of Post-Qualifying Education, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, 27 Queen Street, Edinburgh EH2 1LA.

COURSES FOR ARTICLED CLERKS

A new booklet has now been issued by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales setting out details of courses, in both the public and private sectors, for articulated clerks during the coming year. The names of the institutions of further education holding full-time, revision or day-release courses are given, and details are shown of the length of each course and the latest date for enrolment. There is also a useful 'remarks' column indicating such matters as the number of places at each course and where special tutorials are available.

The booklet shows that full-time courses covering a period of nine months' study are being organized by 19 polytechnics at provincial centres and by eight polytechnics in the Greater London area. These courses are designed to give prospective chartered accountants a fuller understanding of the principles of their profession and its work. Seminars and tutorials constitute a large part of these courses.

Copies of the booklet are available from the offices of the Institute, Chartered Accountants' Hall, London EC2.

ACCOUNTANTS' NEW PRESIDENT

Mr A. H. Hopkins, B.COM., F.A.I.A., A.C.I.S., was elected Chairman of The Association of International Accountants at a recent meeting of the Council of the Association. The new Vice-Chairman for 1970-71 is Mr Douglas Colquhoun, T.D., F.A.I.A., A.C.I.S.

AUDIOTEXT

A series of recordings called Audiotext, introduced by Associated Business Programmes Ltd, is designed to provide a complete sound library, combined with specially prepared training manuals, to enable busy people to keep fully abreast of the latest developments in their particular field.

First of the series is entitled 'The new law of estate duty', comprising lectures given by Professor Wheatcroft on the changes in the Finance Acts of 1968 and 1969, together with the special training manual. In subsequent series Professor Wheatcroft will talk on other aspects of taxation and finance, and there will be internationally recognized authorities speaking on a wide range of subjects.

Further information on Audiotext may be obtained from Associated Business Programmes Ltd, 17 Buckingham Gate, London SW1.

ANNOTATED TAX CASES

Part 5 of Volume XLVIII of the Annotated Tax Cases, edited by Mr Peter Rees, Q.C., of the Inner Temple, is now published and contains reports, with notes on the judgments, of the following cases: *Oram v. PUBLISHERS OF THE ACCOUNTANT

151 STRAND, LONDON WC2R 1JJ

As Reviewed in The Industrial Society

The most obvious gap on the bookshelf of the training manager, and indeed anybody connected with training in industry, has been for a sound and authoritative introduction to the costing of training. Moreover, this is the subject which is producing perhaps the biggest problems in modern training, and yet the subject which has been least well covered both in courses and seminars, and in print.

The appearance of any book on the subject would be welcome, but Douglas Garbutt's contribution must be greeted with all the enthusiasm that can be mustered because it is so good.

Beginning with a masterly summation of the development and workings of the Industrial Training Act, and the cost implications present in the levy/grant system – one of the best available in print – he goes on to explain how a training budget can be arrived at, and what information is necessary to enable training costs to be controlled on a day-to-day basis. All this is done with the utmost clarity and good sense. He then develops his approach into the fields of evaluating and validating training and the cost effectiveness of training, before covering the role of cost accounting in developing training policy and planning training development.

These are areas where most training organisations are lacking – not surprisingly, perhaps, because of the lack of guidance hitherto available – but they are areas which must be developed if training people are finally to achieve the professionalism that so many are striving for.

This book is essential reading for everybody engaged in training, for personnel managers, for line managers, for finance men. All students of personnel management will find this an invaluable work. If what is taught in this book is absorbed and put into practice, Douglas Garbutt will have made one of the most vital contributions to the development of training in recent years. It is, however, shameful that this work has been left to an individual to develop. Certainly there should be some red faces in the Industrial Training Boards, and the Central Training Council, that this has not been their contribution.

If only they knew about us...

there are about 5,000 companies we could help go public.

Among your clients there is at least one company with the growth potential, the will and the management to go public within the next five years. It will have been running for more than three years and will be currently making profits of at least £25,000 before tax. But it needs capital to realise its full potential – and that is where Midland Montagu comes in.

The essence of our operation is capital – capital for expansion. So that your client can build up profits to the level appropriate for a public flotation.

The advantages of dealing with us.

Your client will have a financial partner with interests identical to his own. A partner who together with his associates can save him (and you) time and effort by helping transact all his financial business and in particular can arrange for the all-important sponsorship of his eventual flotation.

Our capital package will be tailored to his needs – he won't be burdened with loans for longer than necessary nor will he be persuaded to give up a bigger equity stake than he need. And although we won't interfere in the management or with your client's existing relationships with his professional advisers, both you and he will find our directors and executives have a breadth of management experience beyond the confines of the City and finance.

How we work.

An initial approach by client or professional adviser leads to a meeting. Following this – if both parties agree to go ahead – we take a detailed look at the company. Assuming we like what we see – and more importantly your client and you like what you see of us – we will make an offer of finance. If this is acceptable the only formalities remaining are a satisfactory Accountant's Report and a formal agreement settled by Solicitors.

We usually take around a 20 per cent. share in the equity – directly in shares or by way of a loan convertible into shares sometime before flotation – whichever is more appropriate to your client's requirements. Alongside this equity participation we normally provide the balance of the capital by a three to five year medium term loan.

I'd like to know more about what Midland Montagu Industrial Finance can offer my client.

INDUSTRIAL FINANCE

Company Secretary Accountant

Young qualified accountant required by rapidly expanding group of finance companies. Some industrial experience preferred. Top salary.

Applications to:

Manson Finance Trust Ltd
115 Park Street, London W1Y 3FC

MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTANT

An opportunity occurs for a Young Man embarking on a career in the above field. This applicant should have an accountancy qualification (or awaiting results of Final examinations) and be ready to fulfil commercial accounting functions within the company whose business is the manufacture of capital goods, i.e., ships. Previous experience in a manufacturing organisation would help but is not considered essential.

Responsibility would be to the Company Secretary for smooth running of routine business and the execution of improved procedures/systems initiated by himself and the Board.

The Company is in the Tate & Lyle Group and has a non-contributory pension and annual bonus scheme. The salary at commencement would be dependent upon age and experience.

Applications should be addressed to

THE SECRETARY
RICHARDS (SHIPBUILDERS) LIMITED
LOWESTOFT, SUFFOLK

COST ACCOUNTANT

Ref. No. AA 226

AT HEADQUARTERS, LEICESTER

A qualified accountant is required for the position of Cost Accountant concerned with a major part of the Board's affairs. Emgas is a large and growing undertaking with 1.3 million customers, 11,000 employees and a turnover approaching £70 million. The financial service to management is at an interesting stage of development and the successful applicant will join an active and keen Management Accounting section. A large third-generation computer is used.

Applicants should have good relevant experience, preferably in a large manufacturing or distributive undertaking. A good personality and proven ability to operate effectively in a large organization will be important attributes.

The salary will be according to experience and qualifications, etc., within a range rising to £3,270 per annum.

ASSISTANT COST ACCOUNTANT

Ref. No. AA 225

AT HEADQUARTERS, LEICESTER

A young accountant, preferably, but not necessarily qualified, is required to join the Management Section of the Board's Finance Department. The work is concerned with budget preparation, reporting on performance of the Board's operating departments, and preparation of reports for the Board's management and for Gas Council. Ad hoc investigations are also carried out from time to time.

The appointment will probably be best suited to someone under about 30 years of age; ability to use accounting techniques intelligently will be an important factor. Experience of the use of budgets and/or standard costs would be an advantage.

The salary will be according to experience and qualifications etc., within a range rising to £2,409 per annum.

Detailed applications quoting appropriate reference number on both the envelope and the letter should be sent to the Personnel Manager, East Midlands Gas Board, De Montfort Street, Leicester, by August 21st, 1970.

Warrington Development Corporation

Accountant

(New Towns Salary Scale VII—£2,184 to £2,751)

The Warrington Development Corporation is responsible in association with a number of Local Authorities, for developing Warrington as a New Town, and for expanding its population from 120,000 to over 200,000 in the next 20 years. This expansion involves not only a large scale housing programme but the supporting infra-structure and industrial, commercial and social development.

A new post of Accountant is now being created in the Finance Department. The position calls for a person, qualified with one of the major accountancy bodies and, preferably, possessing some New Towns experience, though this is not essential. Duties will be concerned with the evolution and subsequent running of computer orientated accountancy systems and budgetary control.

There is a Contributory Pension Scheme. Conditions of Service are excellent and include the payment of removal allowances, temporary lodging allowances, and re-settlement grants. Houses can be made available to staff.

There are promotion prospects for the right person.

Detailed applications, with the names and addresses of two referees, should be submitted to me at the address below to arrive not later than 17th August, 1970.

The Secretary, Warrington Development Corporation, 80 Sankey Street, Warrington, Lancashire.

Chief Accountant

The £50 million turnover Tarmac Construction Group has an opening for a Chief Accountant in its timber and joinery company, C. H. Smith.

As a senior member of the management team he will be expected to play a major role in shaping the company. In addition to managing his staff on the various monthly and annual accounting routines, he will need to develop and improve systems in areas such as control of working capital, stock control records and so on. The work will provide an opportunity for some management systems work as well as straight accounting.

We see this as a unique opportunity for a professionally qualified accountant in his 30s with good industrial experience to spend around 3 years rethinking and reorganising the accounting function in C. H. Smith before promotion or transfer within the Group.
